Smaller Share Of Income Now Goes for Food

Families are spending a smaller share of their income on food today than they were shortly after World War II and getting more for their money, an Oregon State university specialist reports.

For many families, the grocery bill now takes only about a fifth of the take-home pay compared with a fourth shortly after the war, says Zelma Reigle, extension food marketing specialist.

And consumers are getting more marketing services with their food money, she continues. These include processing, distribution and transportation services that enable the shopper to select fresh produce from distant areas year around.

Today's food bill also includes more convenience, more built-in-maid service, ready mixes, heat and serve meals.

Although food prices have gone up in the last 10 years, the farmer receives a smaller share of the food dollar. Price rises due to higher costs for wages, freight rates, fuel, equipment, taxes, advertising and all other items used in getting the food from farm to market. Processing, transportation and distributing costs added together take 61 cents of the food dollar. The farmer gets less than 40 cents—or a dime less than a decade ago.

Compared with other rising costs of living, food ranks as a good value, says the specialist. In the last 15 years, the nation's food bill rose 15 percent; housing costs increased 32 percent; transportation costs, 46 percent; medical care, 57 percent; and average take-home pay jumped 59 percent.

Miss Reigle says that the real cost of food can best be measured by what we get for our labor. Ten years ago an average hour's work bought 2.3 pounds of chuck roast, 1.8 dozen eggs, 6.5 quarts of milk, 9.6 loaves of bread or 24 pounds potatoes. Today, one hour of work is worth 3.3 pounds of chuck roast, 3.6 dozen eggs, 8.1 quarts of milk, 10.1 loaves of bread, or 29 pounds of potatoes.

Mr. and Mrs. H. W. Thomas of Weiser, Mr. and Mrs. James Nichols and family were Friday dinner guests of Mr. and Mrs. Virgil Raney. The event honored Raney on his birthday anniversary.
