

Colleges in Nation Have Facilities For 40,000 New Freshmen in January

More than 40,000 freshmen can be admitted by colleges across the country for the second term beginning in January, according to Changing Times, the Kiplinger magazine. In its fourth annual survey of four-year accredited colleges, the magazine found that although most of these openings are at the large urban colleges, several small liberal arts institutions also offer places.

"If you didn't get into college in the autumn but are qualified, chances are you can gain admission to an accredited college for the spring term in January," editors of the magazine advise. "Surprisingly, the number of colleges reporting room for students was greater this year than last, probably because of new building programs."

Room for More Than Registered

Results of the survey, published in the current edition of the magazine, show that of the 459 institutions which replied, 249 had space for 30,000 more freshmen than actually registered for the fall term. "But, all told, only about 30 percent of the openings reported were for students who could live on campus," the article adds.

The Changing Times questionnaire asked colleges to say what types of students might apply with some hope of acceptance. "Most, of course, want students with good marks, good test scores and evidence of 'leadership' and strong motivation," the magazine reports. "But many colleges also want to spread their geographic representation. And a sizable number are willing to consider C or C-plus students."

Student Expenses Up

"Generally," the articles states, "expenses are up over last year. Estimated total costs for campus students at Whittier, for example, (not counting travel and personal expenses) went from $1,600 to $2,000; at George Washington in D.C., from $1,700 to $1,848; at Berea, from $500 to $550; at MIT, from $2,616 to $2,800; at Bennington, from $3,000 to $3,050."

The magazine also queried colleges on acceptance of transfers and found that the schools which responded accepted around 21,000 sophomore and 17,000 junior transfers this year and expect to take around 23,000 sophomore and 22,000 junior transfers next year.

The editors of the magazine predict that from now on applications will pour into admissions offices at a steadily increasing rate, with a sharp jump around 1964 and a steeper climb after that. Nevertheless, they state, there undoubtedly will be quite a few openings again next autumn, and those reporting vacancies this year are "pretty good bets for next year."

Race Discrimination Appears Near Home Against EOC Student

A petition protesting the treatment, by two La Grande barber shops, of Janson Lai, Eastern Oregon college Negro student from Kenya, East Africa, was circulating the EOC campus Saturday, Dec. 2.

Lai, a freshman pre-medical student, Thursday was refused a haircut at two downtown shops. Lai's fellow residents of Hunt hall, men's dormitory at EOC, initiated the petition and began circulating it among more than 1,000 students. The petition reads in part:

"We, the men of Hunt hall and other interested students of Eastern Oregon college, wish to protest the manner in which a fellow student has been treated. Thursday, Nov. 30, Janson Lai, a foreign student from Kenya, British East Africa, was refused service
