1962 Weed Control Fact Sheets Issued By OSU in Corvallis

Fact sheets listing 1962 weed control recommendations for commercial vegetable and fruit crops have been published by Oregon State University Cooperative Extension service and are now available at county extension offices.

The publications were prepared by Dr. A. A. Duncan, extension vegetable production specialist, and Dr. Garvin Crabtree, assistant professor of horticulture.

The fact sheet for vegetables covers weed control recommendations for crops ranging from asparagus to tomatoes. The recommendations for fruit crops include berries, grapes and tree fruits.

In introducing the recommendations, the authors point out that adequate weed control is important for production of high yields of high quality vegetables. Weeds compete with crops for water, nutrients and light and are often hosts for insects and diseases.

The first line of defense against weeds is good cultural practices, the authors stress. In using chemicals for weed control, growers also should learn as much as possible about the herbicides they use, including information on evaporation loss, movement with soil moisture and limitations on certain weed species to aid in making the most effective use of the control programs listed in the fact sheets.

William Webb while her husband went fishing at Brownlee dam.

Mr. and Mrs. Henry Day were Saturday evening dinner guests of Mr. and Mrs. Leslie Topliff.

Mr. and Mrs. Vernon Parker visited Sunday afternoon with their daughter, Mr. and Mrs. Curtis Eason and family of Homedale.
