Are the Voters Revolting?

President Kennedy's ambitious and far-reaching domestic legislative program for a planned economy, set up by his Harvard advisers, has run into some tough sledding.

His plan for voter qualifications fell by the wayside through a filibuster by southern Democrats. His effort to create a Department of Urban Affairs appears to be a dead issue at this time. The Medicare plan that he considered a must is bottled up in committee with Democrats keeping it from going to a vote. And his last setback came when the House turned down the Freeman Farm plan.

Polls show that he has reached an all-time high popularity, personally. He is liked but the people seem to think he is getting some poor advice and they are letting their lawmakers know it.

Some candidates apparently feel his personal popularity will carry over to them and aid them in getting elected. Morse and Ullman both supported his farm program in spite of the Oregon Farm Bureau being bitterly opposed to it. Morse's letter said, "Our system of a free economy in agriculture and business offers mankind its best hope for a full life and permanent peace."

It appears to us that what was proposed was anything but a "free economy in agriculture." Government controls don't make for freedom but tell the farmer what he can grow, who can grow how much and what will be paid for it. And "free business," governed by the laws of supply and demand, was not considered when the president interfered in the steel price deal.

A recent ad by Warner and Swasey said that once only children believed you could have your cake and eat it too. But our leaders apparently believe it can be done.

We pour out billions for defense, we propose to spend $20 billion to put a man on the moon, we give to countries that lean toward the Communists, hoping they will not increase their "leaning" and we spend other billions for domestic projects that should be paid for locally or skipped entirely.

In the meantime savings, life insurance, government bonds and pensions become less valuable while our gold outflow and unemployment at home increase.

Many of these frills look good and would be nice but they are all paid for by the local taxpayer. It appears that he may have become awakened and has started a revolt. If true, it will show at the polls in November.

To the Editor
 Gate City Journal:

Once again the incumbent congressman from this district has dipped into the taxpayers' pockets to finance his campaign for reelection.

Voters throughout the district have received, in the past few days, a postage-free offer to assist them in obtaining without cost surplus pamphlets from the Government Printing office. These same pamphlets already are available to those who desire them simply by calling the office of their county agent. Our congressman, however, would have voters believe he is doing them a big favor.

He already has a full-time campaign manager living in the district, a man who works for the reelection of his boss every day of the year. This man is on the federal payroll and his expenses are paid by the federal government.

He also has a large allowance for telephone, telegraph and his own personal expenses, drawn from the federal treasury. In addition, large amounts of postage-free mail are distributed throughout the district in behalf of his candidacy.

The incumbent is in the fortunate position of reaching into the pockets of every federal taxpayer in this district to finance his campaigns, even the pockets of those who don't agree with his philosophies or those who think he is misrepresenting the thinking of the people who sent him to congress.

Sincerely,
 BOB CHANDLER

Malheur Farm Bureau Says Defeat Of Ag Bill Victory for Free Economy

Farmers, cattlemen, taxpayers and consumers in Malheur county won a victory when congress defeated the farm bill Thursday, June 22, according to a statement made this week by John Tucke, president of Malheur County Farm Bureau.

The only losers, he declared, were the bureaucrats and government planners.

Tucke continued, "It was a victory for the free enterprise system and for the right of farmers to operate their own farms. The farm bill which was defeated would have taken away from the farmer the 'right to produce' and would have made him little more than a servant of the government."

This was a victory for cattlemen in Malheur county, he said, for the farm bill had provisions that would have seriously affected them under the guise of cutting down grain surpluses. Cattlemen have traditionally operated under the free enterprise system and this bill would have disrupted the future of sound beef production.

The bill if passed would have curtailed the development of new crops in this area such as soybeans.

"End of Family Farms" Tucke declared that by setting up production controls and quotas the bill would have decreased the chance for the family farm to survive. It would pave the way for large corporation farms to buy up the quotas from the small farmer and soon not many family farms would exist.

The only way that farmers could expand their operations would be to buy up their neighbor's quota. Young people who tried to start farming would have to purchase the "right to produce" as well as land and equipment.

Also, if this bill had been enacted, it would have multiplied the opportunities for illegal manipulation of acreage allotments.

Dr. Richard Gay, professor of religion and philosophy at Alaskan Methodist university, will lead the Bible study.
