Ag Department Says Regulations Needed On Dairy Products
Oregon law says the standard for a ton of coal shall be 2000 pounds and for a cord of wood 128 cubic feet—but it doesn't say the standard for a pound of butter or oleomargarine shall be 16 ounces.

So the Dairy Relations Advisory committee to the state department of agriculture is recommending that something be done about the butter and oleo matter. It has suggested that the department propose a regulation, under the Oregon Food law, to establish a retail package weight standard for these two products.

The committee is prompted by the recent appearance on the Oregon market of a package of margarine which weighs 13 ounces instead of the customary 16.

Historically, the weights of these products have been one or two pounds, a half pound or quarter pound. Anything else, the committee believes, would disrupt the trade and deceive the consumer.

In a further move to protect the public on another dairy front, the committee has requested a study of ways and means to inform consumers when substitute dairy products are served in public eating houses, in vending machines, in coffee or on cereals.

Substitute milk and cream undersell dairy products by 15 to 20 percent presently and so well simulate half and half or cream in color, taste and appearance that many people are unable to tell the difference. At this time the imitation milk act does not cover these new products.
