

R. Dejmal Spends Summer in Ecuador Photographing Various Indian Tribes

By Mrs. Vern L. Smith
LINCOLN HEIGHTS — Roger Dejmal has returned to Westmont college at Santa Barbara, Calif., after spending the summer months with Wycliffe Translators in Ecuador, South America.

He spent most of the time at their jungle base at Limoncocha. From there he went by plane, canoe, jeep or truck to visit several Indian tribes, both jungle and highland type.

He accompanied one missionary by canoe to the Siona Indian tribe to deliver primers, the first written word ever to be published in the Siona language. The Gospel of Mark will soon be written in that language.

Main purpose of Dejmal's trip was to take and make black and white photographs for publication and to prepare colored slides for use in deputation work of Wycliffe Translators missionaries. He also helped the agriculturist in the fields.

Before coming back to the U.S., he spent a week in Guatemala City helping the translators in their press room assembling and backing Gospel of Luke books in the Carib language.
