Specialist Advises Good Room Layout To Save Steps and Time for Mothers

Home buyers with pre-school youngsters should give top priority to a family room close to the kitchen, even if it means cutting down on some other areas of the house, advises a home management specialist at Oregon State university.

Layout of the rooms, related to main activities of the homemaker and her youngsters, can spell the difference between a frazzled or fresh mother at the end of the day, says Bernice Strawn, extension specialist.

In a housing survey completed recently by home economists, it was found that in homes where all children were under six years, mothers were interrupted three times as much as when children were of school age. Miss Strawn points out how results of housing research can be applied to buying, remodeling or choosing plans for a new home.

Work Smarter . . . Not Harder

By BERNICE STRAWN, Extension Home Management Specialist

Managing time is like going on a diet—and just as hard to get started. To read about it is apt to be fruitless, because it all depends on one person. Guess who?

Try writing down each day what you "must do," "ought to do" and "hope to do." What fun it is to cross off those finished chores—especially those hope-to-do jobs!

IS STORAGE SPACE TIGHT

In your kitchen? Sardines may not be comfortable, but they are well-organized. Maybe that's a smart tip. Organize that big open space under the sink with one or more of these ideas:

Cleaner rack on the door, sliding towel bars, removable step shelf and portable sliding shelves, now sold at stores. These devices will pack more into the space—even in a trailer or apartment. And they go with you when you move.

For more budget ideas on kitchen storage stretchers, write to me for our OSU Extension bulletin, "Better Kitchen Storage." It's free.

ARE CHEMICALS USED TO

CONTROL PESTS on fruits and vegetables a hazard to your family's health? This is a controversial subject. You'd be paying higher prices if chemicals were not used because some of these foods would be scarce. Experts tell us chemical control of plant disease has more than doubled the yield of tomatoes, a valuable source of vitamin C.

Dr. Virgil Freed, head of OSU's department of agricultural chemistry, says that these chemicals, although poisonous, offer no substantial hazards to humans if used correctly. Without them, both consumer and farmer would suffer. The safety record has been remarkably good.

What does this mean to you homemakers? For one thing, foods eaten raw, such as apples or tomatoes, should be thoroughly washed. Peeling them helps, too. Dr. Freed says most food on the market meets safety standards of the U.S. Department of Agriculture and Food and Drug administration.

Big food processors have experts in the field checking to make sure chemicals are properly handled in growing the produce they pack.

Smart Homemakers Tells Us . . .

When ironing large flat pieces, reverse your ironing board so that you iron on the wide end. Rest your iron on the pointed end. This also works well for ironing men's shirts.
