APPROXIMATELY 12,000 RAINBOW TROUT—of catchable size, swift and scrappy—now await the angler's lure in the man-made lake created by Idaho Power company's Oxbow Dam. The game fish were released in the reservoir last week as the first of about 175,000 hatchery-bred rainbows to be planted in the next eight months. Additional plantings are scheduled for February and June, with 50,000 to be released in June alone. Some 100,000 trout "fry" will be released next July in Wildhorse Creek, located at the 13-mile lake's supper end, in the hope of establishing a native strain. The large-scale planting program is being conducted by Idaho Power in cooperation with the Idaho Fish and Game department and the Oregon Game commission. Here the first of the legal-size rainbows are seen being released in the reservoir from a specially equipped hatchery tank truck under the watchful eyes of (left to right) Paul Cuplin, assistant chief of fisheries; Tom Welsh, biologist, both of the Idaho Fish and Game department, and Wendell Smith, Idaho Power fish biologist.
