Widely Known 'Secretary' to Speak At Meeting of Knife and Fork Club

Philip Lovejoy, one of this country's most widely known speakers who has addressed organizations in an even dozen foreign countries, will be the guest to address members of the Knife and Fork club at 7:30 p.m. Thursday, April 4, at East Side cafe in Ontario.

Until a couple of years ago, Lovejoy spent his time as a "secretary," and, aside from TV's Ann Southern or a chosen few in government circles or politics, is without question the best known among the nation's secretaries. For ten years, 1942-52, he was secretary general of Rotary International.

Member of Scholastic Honoraries

A natural organizer, educator and executive, Lovejoy is also an author of note. He was born in Portland, Maine; educated at the University of Michigan and is a member of two honorary scholastic fraternities—Phi Beta Kappa and Phi Delta Kappa.

He has spoken to many diverse audiences in the countries of Mexico, England, Ireland, Netherlands, Germany, France and in

Wool, Grain, Seed Market Outlook Discussed in Recent OSU Bulletin

The 1963 outlook for Oregon grain, wool and seed prices is discussed in the new Oregon Farm and Market Outlook just published by Oregon State university and now available from county extension offices.

M. D. Thomas, OSU extension agricultural economist, points out that supports to grain market prices provided by government loans and agreements are being reduced in 1963 for all except oats, while direct payments to qualifying wheat, barley corn and sorghum growers are being made to offset possible income reducing effects of these changes in loan rates.

How loan rate reductions will affect market conditions remains to be seen, he writes. Other factors to be considered include participation in 1963 acreage diversion programs, ordinary changes in supply or demand and "federally administered" changes in such price influencing forces as amounts of export assistance, domestic sales of CCC stocks or other features of grain programs.

Fairly Strong Wool Market Seen

Economic forces that influence Oregon wool prices suggest a fairly strong market undertone in 1963 and higher average prices, notes Stephen C. Marks, OSU extension agricultural economist, in his wool outlook report.

However, Marks adds that the recent increase in U. S. wool stocks and the attitude of fabric makers toward buying and using wool at the higher prices now prevailing cloud the future.

Cause for "some optimism" in Oregon's turf seed market situation is seen by Ray H. Teal, OSU extension seed and grain marketing specialist, in his report. Carryovers on July 1 this year should be smaller for most kinds of turf seeds than at the same time last year.

Prospects are good that alfalfa seed carryover will be smaller this summer than last, especially of improved varieties such as Vernal, Teal points out.
