Adrian Church Ladies Report on Activities Slated in Near Future

Women's association of the Adrian Community church met last Thursday afternoon at the R. D. McKinley home with 16 members in attendance. Mrs. McKinley, president, was in charge of the meeting, while Mrs. Marguerite Scott led devotionals.

Mrs. Earl Winn told of the need for women's cotton dresses and children's clothing for a rummage sale to be conducted at the Adrian labor camp, with date to be announced later. She reported that there had been approximately 200 migrants at the camp, but many had now gone to Eastern Idaho and will return later. She said they also are in need of an English instructor.

A cooked food sale is planned Saturday, June 22, in the Adrian stores. Purpose of the sale is to raise funds to pay tuition and carfare for children of the community to attend Sawtooth camp.

It was announced that vacation Bible school will begin July 8 and continue until July 19. Morning sessions, from 9 to 11:30, are being planned.

A report on the Synod school to be held June 24-28 in Caldwell was given at the June 13 meeting.

Lesson was presented by Mrs. Fitzsimmons, after which a pink and blue shower was given for Mrs. Jim Doughty.

Oregon State University Conducts Field Tests to Develop Better Onions

An onion superior in yield, quality, storage ability and resistance to pink root, the most important onion disease, is being sought in field tests being conducted by Oregon State university.

Heading the project, in cooperation with Western Oregon Onion Growers association, are W. A. Frazier, horticulturist, and E. K. Vaughn, plant path- ologist, OSU Agricultural Ex- periment station. Cooperating with them are A. A. Duncan, OSU extension vegetable pro- duction specialist, and Washing- ton and Marion county extension agents.

Some 450 small plots have been established in the Lake Labish, Gaston and Corvallis areas, Dun- can said, to test hybrids, selec- tions, breeding lines and varieties. The onions being tested were de- veloped mostly from the Danvers variety by plant breeders at OSU, University of Wisconsin, private industry and the U.S. Department of Agriculture Research center at Beltsville, Md.

Selected by Willamette Growers

Many of the Danvers strains used in the onion breeding pro- gram in Oregon were selected for many years by Willamette Valley growers themselves, Duncan not- ed.

Although researchers feel the grower selections are already of superior quality, they hope a higher degree of pink root resis- tance can be incorporated in them, he said.

It is extremely important too that test plants be grown and se- lected on the sites and soil types where they will be grown com- mercially.

The soil in the Lake Labish area is a peat-type, while the Gaston soils contain less than 50 percent organic matter. The plots near Corvallis at the OSU vege- table research farm are in min- eral soil containing less than five percent organic material.

Best Lines to Be Used

From the test plots, outstanding onion bulbs will be selected for quality, yield and disease resis- tance and then tested for storage

PLANS TRIP TO TACOMA

Mrs. Kinsey Keveren, con- ference secretary of supply work for the Methodist WSCS, will leave June 23 for Tacoma to attend Jurisdiction School of Missions. The school will be held on the campus at the University of Pu- get Sound.

life. The best lines found will then be further inbred and hy- bridized and field tested again, Duncan explained.

This year also, Duncan is con- ducting field trials at various places throughout the state in an effort to find a satisfactory small white onion for processing which can be grown in Oregon for both canning and freezing operations.

By manipulation of seed- ing rates and variety, Duncan hopes to produce white onions from 3/4 to 1 1/4 inches in size. Pure white onions are necessary for process- ing because of their attractive color after cooking, he explained. Presently, the United States im- ports nearly all such onions.
