ry the load. (The Tuesday market showed the biggest increase in the price of industrial stocks in the history of the exchange.)

By Wednesday morning business had assumed normal condition, and while most people were still filled with grief, they did not feel the popular President's death would make a big change in world conditions.

DRIVERS LICENSE EXAMINER SLATES NYSSA VISIT DEC. 6

Journalism Student Reports OSU Mood

knees. Even this thought is not pleasant or humorous now.

We walked down to the MU and had a coke. We returned and waited for Karen Saito to return from class. We rushed downstairs to see her and she greeted us with tears in her eyes, saying, "President Kennedy has been shot." We couldn't believe her words.

The report came again on the radio. By this time the whole dorm echoed with the sound of radios. Everyone was eagerly listening and there was a prayer in everyone's heart.

"Please, don't let him die, not now."

President's Death Reported

The story came by radio over and over—the same story. Suddenly a flash stated that the President had died. A gasp was heard coming out of various rooms up and down the halls. Sobs were next. In a very few minutes a report came that he was not dead.

Ten minutes more passed and everyone was waiting and praying harder than ever.

Then the truth, "Two priests stated that when they had left the President, he had been dead." The only thing one could do was to try to get control of himself.

Radio Blares

The cafeteria was full but the trays were going down the belt full of food. No one was hungry. Music and gaiety generally fill the air of the cafeteria, but they were now gone. The buzz of voices couldn't be heard. The only sound was the blaring of a radio over the public address system.

It was raining outside and all was bleak. It hadn't been raining the last three or four days. In fact, it didn't start to rain until about 10:30. I hate to think what it must be in Washington, D.C., if it is like this on campus.

Commons Almost Empty

What will happen next? The telephone hasn't rung for over two hours which is very unusual because it generally rings every five minutes. As I walked back from the home economics building, I noted that the MU Commons was almost entirely empty.

This has been the most unforgettable three hours in my whole life. I will surely have something to tell my grandchildren. I feel lost and all alone . . .

Now I have written and it has helped. It is so strange; the clouds are starting to drift away in a southeasterly direction, toward that fateful city of Dallas. Truthfully, you can see the clouds clearing. The sun may shine but even with its rays, spirits will remain low.

Ah, I hear a telephone. Things may be brightening up.

Books on Espionage, Treason Head New List at Malheur County Library

New books going into circulation Saturday, Nov. 30, at Malheur county library include the following:

"A Short History of Espionage" by Allison Ind. Accounts of spy efforts from ancient times to the present.

"Anatomy of Spying" by Ronald Seth. A former British spy writes the history of espionage from ancient Rome to the U-2 episode.

"Treason in the Twentieth Century" by Margret Boveri. A study of the entire phenomenon of contemporary treason.

"The F.B.I. in Peace and War" by Frederick L. Collins. A new, revised and enlarged edition, giving the up-to-date story of the Bureau and of J. Edgar Hoover.

"The Battle of Arnhem" by Christopher Hibbert. The nine-day battle, fought at Arnhem between Sept. 17 and 26, 1944, which was one of the great epic tragedies of the British Army.

"My Darling Clementine" by Jack Fishman. An account of the life of Lady Churchill.

"Westward Vision" by David Lavender. This fifth book of the "American Trails Series" tells the story of the Oregon Trail.

"Idaho Reader" edited by Grace Jordan. A collection of writings about Idaho by 37 Idahoans.

"Exploring the Secret of the Sea" by William J. Cromie. An account of how the land and oceans developed and life began in the sea, and what the modern oceanographic explorations have discovered about ocean depths.

"The Fishes" by F. D. Ommanney. The latest volume in the "Life Nature Library."

"To a Young Dancer" by Agnes DeMille. Every phase of a dancer's career from her first lesson at the age of eight to performances on the professional stage is described in this book.

"Writing" by David Diringier. A concise yet wide-ranging survey of writing from its earliest pictographic beginnings.

"Ichthyology" by Karl F. Lagler. This book covers virtually every aspect of the science of fishes—how they are built; how they function; how they react to their environment; and how they reproduce, feed and grow.

"The Great White Way" by Allen Churchill. An evocative history of the theater from 1900, when Floradora opened, to the Actor's Equity strike in 1919, at the beginning of Prohibition.

"The Art of Group Conversation" by Rachel Davis DuBois. Using the proven method dealt with in this book, a leader can get a group meeting off to a good start, achieve better understanding of the problems, issues and goals involved, arrive at good decisions and get more commitment for action from each member of the group.

"Civil War Guns" by William B. Edwards. The complete story of Federal and Confederate small arms—design, manufacture, identification, procurement, issue, employment, effectiveness and post-war disposal.

"The Algerians" by Pierre Bourdieu. A book about the Algerian people—their traditions and culture.

"Cat and Mouse" by Gunter Grass. Strange tale of a boy who performs marvelous feats to compensate for an odd physical deformity—a huge overdeveloped Adam's apple.

"To Build a Ship" by Don Berry. The story of a handful of young men who took up land on Tillamook Bay in Oregon during the 1850's.

"First Man West" by Alexander Mackenzie. The author's journal of his voyage to the Pacific coast of Canada in 1793.
