

Pioneer Resident F. Patrick O'Neill Succumbs; Rites Conducted Monday

Funeral services for Francis Patrick O'Neill were conducted Monday afternoon, May 25, 1964, at Lienkaemper chapel. Officiating minister was the Rev. Paul Ludlow of the Nyssa Methodist church.

Mr. O'Neill, a pioneer resident of Malheur county, succumbed Friday in a Nyssa nursing home at the age of 83 years.

He was born Nov. 1, 1880, in Cuffies Cove, Mendocino County, Calif., a son of Frank and Winifred O'Neill. The family left the Golden state soon after his birth and went by boat to The Dalles, Ore.

Then by team and wagon, they headed eastward. Upon traveling in 1881 to Willow Creek, via the old immigrant road, they decided to settle and filed on land near the present village of Willow Creek.

In 1886 the deceased's father acquired the Hot Springs stage station on Bully Creek. This was on the old Bendier road, the only route between the rail station at Ontario and the interior country around Burns, Harney and Drewsey.

This station catered to both stage and freight lines, making overnight accommodations available. The route has been used very little since the railroad and highway were built up the canyon of the Malheur, but the old road is indelibly marked by iron tires having worn into the rocky surface in many places.

Owing to the nature of Patrick O'Neill's work, he came in contact with many men who with the passing of years became famous. Among them were cattle kings, Indian fighters and some men of less respectable occupations, outside the law.

As he grew older, the deceased went into the cattle business and later filed on a homestead on Willow Creek where he farmed until 1945.

That year he and his wife, the former Ada Montgomery, whom he married in 1933, moved to his five-acre place one mile south of Nyssa. For the past year he had lived in Nyssa and since March 1, after suffering a stroke, had resided in a nursing home.

Mr. O'Neill is survived by his widow, Ada of Nyssa; two half-sisters, Mabel Nichol of Pacifica, Calif., and Elsie Crain of Seattle. Other survivors include two stepsons, James Montgomery of Pixley, Calif., and Gordon Montgomery of Nyssa; two stepdaughters, Mrs. Flora Orton of Bowling Green, Fla., and Mrs. Lucille Reed of Delano, Calif. Three nieces and three nephews also survive.

Interment was made in Evergreen cemetery at Ontario under direction of Lienkaemper funeral home. Pallbearers were Herman Towne, Frank Sherwood, Tom Johnson, Marion Tracy, John and Vaughn Stringer.
