FARM BUREAU FURROW

By SCOTT LAMB, Information Director

The Courage to Farm

It takes courage to farm these days. Farm income is lagging far behind most city jobs and the appeal of the eight-hour day, the steady paycheck and the white collar job is taking its toll of the nation's farmers.

This is especially true with the younger folks who are loaded with ambition and have a whole world to conquer.

Recently, at a Farm Bureau meeting, a speaker pointed out the new look in land valuation in eastern Oregon. Land with little value for agriculture is being over-valued by city people looking for a retreat.

The speaker listed several of the new values which up the land prices—fresh air, no crowding, good water, sunny skies—all of these things are taking on new meaning to the smog-enshrouded city man and he is shopping for such a place.

What is the value of rearing a family on a farm? Is it more than the dollars that come from the crops? We suspect most people who live off the farm would count it more heavily than farmers. However, each sees only the green grass in the other fellow's pasture.

Agriculture today has more opportunities for the ambitious young man who wants to work for himself than any other pursuit.

It lacks greatly in guaranteed security but it holds out the hand of opportunity as never before. The main ingredient needed for success is courage to try, and try again. There is a great deal of risk, but what venture with chances for success does not have risk? It takes individual planning, individual decision-making and individual initiative.

We hate to see this heritage which has built America diminish in any way. We need young men who will forge ahead even in the face of adversity. We need more and more young men with courage to build agriculture.

IT'S YOUR LAW

By Oregon State Bar

The Facts Only

In a trial the parties present the facts and the judge or jury draw their conclusions from them. Thus a witness who tries to tell the court who was at fault is likely to find this opinion ruled out. Most witnesses can speak only of things they can see and hear, not what they conclude from these things. The court—judge or jury—decides who, if anybody, is at fault.

But expert witnesses such as doctors, engineers, scientists, mechanics and others often express their opinion to help the court reach a decision.

In a suit for deaths caused by an explosion of nitroglycerin used by an industrial firm, a professor of chemistry has been recognized as an expert on the cause of the disaster. Doctors of medicine frequently testify as to the probable cause of an illness on the relationship of an injury to a disability.

Most of us can qualify as experts in some field. We can give fairly sound views as to the speed, distance or the size of things. When people whom we see every day get sued, we may well have to testify as to their conduct, views or feelings. Certain people whose handwriting we often see, may make us expert in their handwriting.

We are all experts on our own things. If the state condemns your land for a freeway, you can testify as to its value, use and prospects. Of course, other witnesses may differ with you. If the government imposes a gift or a death tax based on the gift's value, you can challenge the tax and testify as to the gift's value.

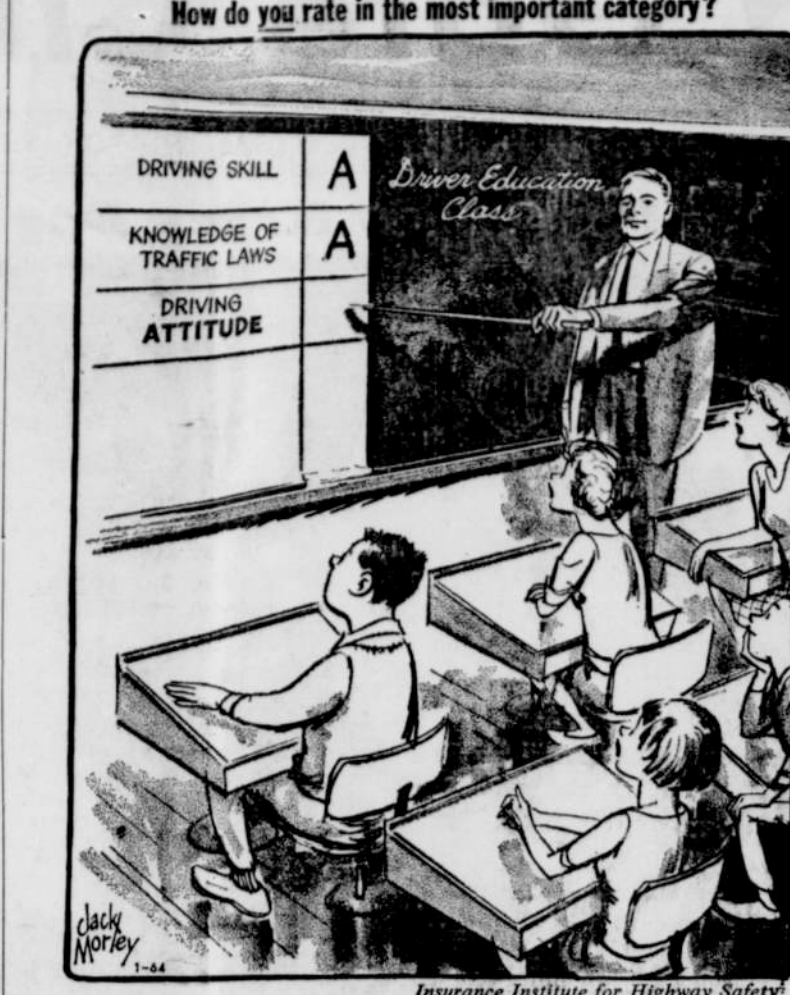

Who is an expert? It is anyone the trial judge says. In one case the court was trying the accused for burglary. The case turned upon his fingerprints. He tried to call in an "expert" to disprove the fingerprints. But the court said the "expert" did not qualify. Although he had taken a criminology course, he had never had any practical experience in checking fingerprints.

(Oregon lawyers offer this column as a public service. No person should apply or interpret any law without the aid of an attorney, who is completely advised of the facts involved. Even a slight variance in facts may change the application of the law.)
