

City Librarian Reports Latest Books Available to Patrons; Hours Listed

Mrs. Max Urry, librarian, reminded patrons this week that Nyssa public library is open for checking out and returning books from 3 to 6 p.m. Tuesdays, Wednesdays and Thursdays and from 2:30 until 6 p.m. on Saturdays.

The librarian reported the following books have recently been added to the shelves and are available for circulation.

ADULT READING

"The Words" by Jean-Paul Sartre. This is an autobiography of the author of 20 years. There have been child prodigies before, but few have been so blissfully happy as Sartre at 10. His second cousin is Albert Schweitzer. He grew up in a gentle book-loving family — raised by a widowed mother and doting grandparents. Ultimately, Sartre is exploring and evaluating the whole use of books and language in human experience.

"North by Night" by Peter Burchard. Lieutenant Tim Bradford, Seventh Connecticut Volunteers, heard a voice say, "A prisoner, sir." He knew that for him the war was finished. From that moment, through a dreary term in a Confederate jail, Tim and his friend, Red Kelly, waited and lived for a chance to escape. At last, the chance came.

Erich Fromm's "The Heart of Man" opens new approaches to psychoanalytic theory and dynamic social psychology. It is a most timely contribution to the understanding of the current wave of violence and destructiveness which has become an ever-increasing threat to mankind's capacity for growth. Dr. Fromm shows how man may escape from his greatest prison—the destructive aspect of himself.

"Chitty Chitty, Bang, Bang" by Ian Fleming. The late author's name is a watchword among mystery and adventure fans—adult style. Here, with "Chitty Chitty, Bang Bang," a whole new generation of fans will be introduced to his soaring imagination and generous wit.

"The Medical Itch" by Claude Benjamin. Claude Benjamin is the pen name of a distinguished member of the medical profession who states that his effort here is "a gentle spoof on medicine. This is not a sick book, but a happy, get-well book." The farcical antics of the imaginary characters, in fact, have a basis in the reality of his early experiences as a doctor.

"Sixpence in Her Shoe" by Phyllis McGinley. The author states, "So highly do I regard our profession and its importance to the human scheme, it seems to me occupation sufficient to fill a life, a heart." In this warm, wise and witty book, whose title derives from the legendary rewards once given to good housewives, she shares with readers the joys and problems of the domestic profession.

"Home Is the Sailor" by Jorge Amado. Vasco Moscoso de Arago laments that his life as the son of a wealthy merchant has brought him no rank, degree or title. So—though Vasco has never made a sea voyage—a friend gets him a license as a ship's captain. He moves to the suburbs of Bahia and takes up with relish the life of an honored, retired sea dog.

"Ben Hur" by Lew Wallace. A tale of Christ, full of action and excitement with great reverence. Through the adventures of its hero, the narrative sweeps across the Roman Empire to reach a sublime climax at the foot of a cross on a hill in Jerusalem.

CHILDREN'S BOOKS

"Bristle Face" by Zachary Ball. Bristle Face is a hairy, marble-eyed, stickery-hided dog that looks half hound, half porcupine. Read how this dog develops into a keen-nosed trail dog.

"The Reluctant Dragon" by Kenneth Grahame.

"The Blind Colt" by Glen Rounds.

"Frog Went A-Courtin'." by John Langstaff.

"The Boy's Book of Gun Handling" by Richard A. Knight. Any gun has two extreme ends. The end at the front can kill, and the end at the rear can cripple. Whether a gun is used for shooting at stationary targets or at birds, squirrels or elephants, it is a danger to the hunter if he does not know what the gun can do and cannot do. Words, photographs and drawings give the young gun handler an entertaining "course" covering the shot gun, hand gun and rifle.

"Forts in America" by Harold L. Peterson.

"The Bat-Poet" by Randall Jarrel.

"The Big Jump and Other Stories" by Benjamin Elkin.
