Christ's Resurrection Is Our Hope

Guest Editorial by the Rev. John W. Bullock,
 Pastor, Nyssa Church of the Nazarene

Sin nailed the beloved Son of God to the cross. Jesus gave Himself a ransom for the sinner by obedience to the Father. But, it is His resurrection over sin, death and hell that we have a blessed hope.

Paul in his letter to the Romans, chapter 8, verse 32, said, "He that spared not His own Son, but delivered Him up for us all, how shall He not with Him also freely give us all things?"

God through His Son will first of all give a heart of peace. Forgiveness brings peace to the soul of man. When you humbly come before the throne of God and confess your sins and by faith believe that He is the Son of God and forsake your sins, you shall have peace.

Jesus was nailed to the cross because He rightly claimed to be the Son of God and had power to forgive sins. His resurrection proved to the world that this is the TRUTH.

God through His Son will also give us strength for the day. Life with all of its perplexities, anxieties and heartaches is made hopeful by the ever-present spirit of God in our daily living. The song writer knew what He meant when he said, "What a friend we have in Jesus, all our sins and griefs to bear. What a privilege to carry everything to God in prayer."

During this Easter time, turn to Christ, the resurrected, for peace and hope.

IT'S YOUR LAW

By Oregon State Bar

Parental Consent To Medical Treatment

It is a good idea to give written consent for necessary medical care for your child if he or she leaves home for a visit or trip, or if you plan to be away for any length of time.

For example, a school nurse may bring a boy into a hospital with an acute case of appendicitis, but the doctor may well hesitate to go ahead and operate without consent of the parents.

Is the doctor being arbitrary by refusing to operate without consent from the parents? The answer is, he is not. A consent in such circumstances is not just a "legal technicality" that can be easily dispensed with.

A doctor may give emergency treatment when a child's health or life may be at stake. But he is likely to put off any follow-up care until he can get consent from the child's parents.

Even an adult must request treatment and grant consent to medical care before a doctor can give it to him. Children cannot grant consent for themselves.

However, by going to the doctor you show your willingness and consent to being treated by him. If you are taken to a doctor unconscious, however, he may give you emergency treatment but later refuse to treat you further until you have consented to treatment.

Since children cannot give consent on themselves, it is necessary for their parents to consent for them. When the children are at home or the parents can be reached in a few minutes time, consent poses no problem.

But when parents may be gone or the child may be away from home and parents for some time, it is a good idea to provide a written consent for treatment they might need in unexpected situations.

With the ever-increasing need for a more skilled work force, the House Labor and Management committee has sent to the floor for action this week a bill which provides for extensive revision of the state's apprenticeship training program.

The bill (HB 1167) is an outgrowth of a technological employment interim committee study which concluded that more job training is needed, industrial unions and employers should have an equal voice in the program and the commissioner of the Bureau of Labor should have more authority over the conduct of the program.

Presently, craft unions (AFL-CIO) and employers virtually control the state's apprenticeship program with domination of the Apprenticeship council an control over the director.

After an exhaustive investigation, the interim committee discovered that under present law and present administrative practices the program is not fulfilling the over-all needs of the state.

The committee found there were a number of occupations for which the Apprenticeship council had standards but no trainees enrolled, particularly in the non-building trades. The dropout rate averaged 25 percent and the number of graduates only averaged 355 annually during the past five years.

It is also discovered that there was a limited availability of apprenticeships for non-white youth as evidenced by the fact that only seven non-white youths have been enrolled in the past five years.

The rigidity of present policies which precluded some programs, the few programs for industrial plants and the difficult tangle of administrative responsibilities for developing and supervising approved programs led to the conclusion that extensive revision was absolutely necessary.

Proposed changes, however, opened a split in the ranks of labor which has caused a bitter struggle for control of the training program.

The bill itself would eliminate control by the craft unions and employers and give industrial representatives an equal voice on the expanded and renamed Apprenticeship and Training council. Thus, industrial unions would have three employee representatives and three employer representatives and craft unions would have equal representation on the 12-member council.

Authority to hire and fire the director would be taken away from the council and given to the labor commissioner who is to supervise the program. The council would then make policy and the commissioner would be responsible for carrying out that policy.

Additionally, the bill directs the council to establish committees on local levels to foster training programs in the non-apprenticeable fields. It also provides for pre-apprenticeship training programs which could be credited toward journeyman status.

Senator Don Willner (D-Portland), co-sponsor of the bill and chairman of the interim committee which investigated the program, commented that one of the ways in which Oregon can help provide for stable employment is to "make training available to more Oregon youngsters."

Willner pointed out that a recent Portland Metropolitan Manpower Resource study projected that 10,000 skilled jobs would probably go begging by 1969 while the number of unemployed in the area would be near 25,000.

He declared that revision of the apprenticeship program is just one of a number of things which can be done to "create a skill adaptable work force;" but to meet the challenge of technological change, it is the responsibility of the individual, private enterprise and labor, local communities, state government and the federal government in that order.
