Hints on Buying Children's Clothing Given by OSU Extension Specialist

When shopping for children's school clothes, homemakers should consider suitability and wearability—but it's also important to take the children's likes and dislikes into account, points out Elaine Carlson, extension clothing and textiles specialist at Oregon State university.

The mother who dresses her children in clothes that fit well, for instance, may be giving the child a much-needed boost in self-confidence. This is particularly important for younger children who may be shy or uncertain of the school experience anyway.

Elementary school children who are forced to wear clothes that are too large or too small, or that they don't like, will feel uncomfortable or poorly dressed. Younger children are often more interested in details that make a coat or dress look pretty to them, while older children are more concerned with wearing the same type of clothes that are worn by their friends.

Clothes Should Be Comfortable
Once you have made certain that the clothing fits the child properly and meets with his or her approval, you should make certain that the clothing is comfortable and serviceable, designed to permit freedom of movement and made of fabrics that are washable and require little care.

Fabrics should be sturdy enough to take plenty of hard wear, but should not be stiff, rough or heavy. Non-shrink finishes and those that shed dirt but absorb perspiration are a must. Trimming should be simple, sturdy and should not fade in sunlight or when washed.

Patterns and colors should be similar to those worn by the child's friends and classmates. Clothing should allow some room to grow. Check to see whether you can let out seams or hems as it becomes necessary. Skirts for girls and pants for boys should have some extra room at the waist.

Other Suggestions Given

Pleats, yokes with gathers or darts at the necklines are signs of adequate width across the back. Blouses and shirts should be long enough so that tails don't pull out when arms are raised.

Arms-eyes and sleeve bands should be large enough to be comfortable and prevent tearing. Clothes that button in front rather than in back are usually easier for the youngster to manage.

Clothing should be well constructed. Check stitching, especially at the arms-eye and waistline, because wear shows up at these places first. Flat buttons should be sewn on with a shank. Look for labels that include size and body measurement, directions for care, shrinkage control and fiber content.

Don't Be in the Dark About Heating Facts

The dark blank at the top of this advertisement might well be an illustration of flameless heat. We hope it reminds you not to draw a blank when choosing heat for your home. Remember, it's the INTENSE BLUE FLAME that counts. You don't have to settle for an indescribable, invisible, inanimate quality of questionable value dubbed "flameless." Heat nature's way—with natural gas, the fuel with a FLAME that keeps clean, pure, warm air circulating thoroughly in every room. Not only will you have better, healthier warmth . . . the lower cost will kindle a FLAME of gratitude in your heart. Conversions (furnace or space heaters) cost qualified householders only $2 a month, added to their regular gas bills, October through May. If you prefer to own your heating equipment, see your favorite dealer for an easy conversion at low cost.
