

A GOLF LESSON

"Now, sir, the first thing you must realize is that there is no such thing as a natural golf swing. It is simple, but not natural."

"No, I doubt that your son-in-law has a natural swing. Or, if he has, sir, that he can hit the ball with it."

"To hit the ball we must first of all stand properly. Feet as wide as the shoulders. How can you tell from there how wide your shoulders are? I've never been asked that before. People can usually sort of feel it. I suppose. No, sir, they are not quite that wide."

"Now we flex the knees, dipping each a little toward the other. You should make as if you were about to sit down."

"We don't actually sit down, sir. Just sort of begin to. Yeah, almost like that."

"Now we have to turn back so that we are facing backward, only without the head moving. It is quite simple. The head should be held up, not down. You should be looking at the ball over the bottom eyelid and the back of the left shoulder."

"That's almost right, sir. Now come down again. Down again! We only make a slight pause at the top. No, sir, you haven't got stuck. Nobody has ever got stuck like that, I assure you. It has never happened. Relax. That's it, relax. That's better."

"Now that we are down again, let us do it once more; feet as wide as the shoulders, head still, eyes looking down over the bottom lid, knees flexed and inward — no sir, not touching — elbows more together. Now we turn, taking the club straight back with the left arm straight and the right elbow into the side, turning the hips and the shoulders and getting the left shoulder more or less under the chin.

"I know it feels funny. I promise, sir, it does not look a bit funny. Anyway there is nobody looking."

"Now all we have to do is to swing the clubhead down with the hands. No, that's a figure of speech, sir. We still grasp the club by the top. But lightly. Turn the hips forward and round to the left and bring the right shoulder underneath the left. And come down into the ball. Go!"

"We held the club too lightly, sir. We must keep hold of it. So now we do it again."

"Only, this time, left toe out at 45 degrees, right toe at 90 degrees, knees flexed, head still and up, left eye on the ball, looking at it over the lower lid, elbows together, left arm straight, right arm bent and close into the side, hips rotating, shoulders turning right back, left shoulder under the chin, spine straight — it's quite simple — good."

"Now TURN ON THE POWER. You know, sir, you wouldn't have fallen over the edge into the bunker if only you had kept your head still. That's all what we must remember, sir. We've got to keep our head still!"
