A HUNTER'S FABLE

"Because I am perfectly aware that you are not a hunter, I will not waste time asking you whether you have gotten your buck," Bill Mayden advised John Bullock one day early this week as they enjoyed a coffee at the Polar Bear. "Likewise," he added, "you needn't ask me how I fared, because you know I don't hunt, either."

"This is indeed true," John came back, adding, "I have asked just such a question of any number of my friends, however, and in many cases . . . most, in fact . . . I have been advised to tend to my own business, which translates to 'no, blast it, I didn't get a buck.' Lots of people are touchy that way."

"Touchy is right," Bill agreed, "but I can't say as I blame them too much. Fellow makes elaborate plans for a hunting foray, gets up at some unearthly hour, blunders around through the woods for heaven knows how long, stumbles back into civilization carrying nothing but a rifle that weighs just under a ton. Pretty disheartening."

"You know," John replied, "I have a friend who says that his theory is that the hunter doesn't find the deer. The deer finds the hunter. For him the system has worked out pretty well over the years. He picks a spot that seems likely to him to be where a deer might come. He waits. Pretty soon the deer shows up and he shoots it. Doesn't work for everybody, I guess, but it works for him."

The moral: Going out and shooting a deer isn't what you'd call a lead-pipe cinch. It IS possible to come back empty handed. However, there is a ray of sunshine here. You don't have to be much of a hunter to find "rich man's food at poor man's prices." It's just where it's always been for lo! these many years. And it gets better year by year!
