Buying Power of Farm Workers Up; Lower in 'Real' Wages

Sharp price recoveries in December lifted farm product buying power to the highest level in three years. However, "real" buying power of farm workers is still considerably behind that of the urban population, reports Mrs. Elvera Horrell, Oregon State university extension agricultural economist.

The index of prices received by farmers nationally, vaulted 11 points (4 percent) in December, according to the U. S. Department of Agriculture. This was the largest increase for a single month since March 1958. The gains were attributed to the unusually high price of hogs and modest increases in eggs, cattle and corn.

At the same time, prices paid by farm operators also moved up last month. Major increases were in feeder cattle and calves, replacement dairy cattle, turkey poults, all groups of feeds, metal products, concrete products, lumber and roofing materials.

In comparison, prices that farmers receive for their products moved up faster than prices they paid for goods and services. This caused farm product buying power to register a sizeable gain.

Furthermore, in the past half-dozen years, prices city people pay for goods and services have increased faster than prices paid by farm people for the same items. However, the price story alone does not represent the "real" buying power of the two groups.

Non-Farm Wages Much Higher
Net farm income has come up less than 20 percent since the 1957-59 base period. But off-farm wage and salary incomes have leaped nearly 50 percent.

This means that on a "real" basis, before income taxes, U. S. farm operators gained less than 10 percent in their buying power, while city workers boosted their purchasing power by more than 30 percent.
