A MEMBER OF THE JOURNAL STAFF first noticed these children and their pet while working on a window display. Not only were they cute youngsters but also of a happy nature and very friendly, smiling and waving their hands. The trio includes three-year-old Mark Pittz, his one-year-old sister, Holli, and Sally, their poodle-pekingese cross. They belong to John and Sharon Pittz of 114 Park avenue. While waiting in the car for their mother to return from a brief shopping trip in downtown Nyssa, Holli found a plaything and a noisy toy it was. She had discovered the hornring on the car's steering wheel and was having a "ball," laughing and bouncing on the car seat, and at the same time entertaining Mark and Sally. She not only attracted the attention of all members of the Journal staff, but others within hearing distance. Of course, it wasn't long before Mother Sharon returned and the fun stopped because she took over the steering wheel.—Staff Photo.

ELECTRIC HEAT

With thorough insulation, including storm windows and doors, many older homes can readily be converted to electric heat. An extra bonus is Idaho Power's special, low "All-Electric" rate.

You can get full information and assistance at your local Idaho Power Company office.

Electric living helps hard-working Dickersons

"Modern electric service and our total electric home are important to us," say Mr. and Mrs. C. W. Dickerson, Jr., rural customers of Idaho Power Company near Paul, Idaho.

Mr. Dickerson farms, teaches school and sells insurance. Mrs. Dickerson helps with the farming while cooking, laundering and keeping a home for a family of nine. The older children pitch in, too.

"Reddy Kilowatt is part of the team," say the Dickersons. "We get our money's worth from all-electric living."
