THEY GO TOGETHER LIKE HAM AND EGGS

NATURAL GAS

Home Heating and Water Heating

Ham is good alone, and so are eggs. But together they make a combination so perfect it seems a shame to separate them. This is just as true of home heating and water heating. You are far better off, both comfort-wise and expense-wise, if you use natural gas only for heating. The same is true if your only use of gas is in an automatic water heater. But get the two together and you're approaching perfection in modern living. Heat with gas and heat water with gas and you've got a natural combination: perfect, fully fresh-air circulated, uniform healthful heat that reaches every corner of every room; plus never-failing, always-there-when-you-want-it hot water for the lowest price you've ever paid. If yours is a one-use gas family, let the Cascade Man give you some worthwhile facts and figures. Let natural gas—the world's finest fuel—do at least double duty in your home... for the sake of your comfort and the sake of your pocketbook.
