an issue of the Journal, including the linotype, Illustrator picture engraver, the newspaper press and folder. He also demonstrated the job press operations and presented each of the 16 pupils with a "slug" bearing their names. The pupils seemed intrigued by this souvenir and soon had every available scrap of paper covered with their names, using the "slug" much the same as a rubber stamp. In this manner they learned the basic principle of letterpress printing.—Staff Photo.

Student Describes Recent Field Trip Into Succor Canyon With M. Corey

By SCOTT ENGSTROM
 Then on to the canyon itself, students in Mrs. Dorothy Wilson's and Mrs. Hazel Lane's sixth grade rooms went on a field trip to Succor creek. Students in our classroom (Mrs. Wilson's) went in one bus, while Mrs. Lane's pupils went in another. Our bus driver was Mrs. Bud Sappe. Don Bishop and John Lane followed in a pickup.

We left at about 9 o'clock and headed for Mr. Maurice Corey's place. There we went through his house, which is full of rocks. We also saw some of his fossils and tools he uses to cut and polish his stones. Everyone was given two plume agates. Mr. and Mrs. Corey and Adolph Schroeder served as our guides.

Tells of Succor Creek
 From there we went on to Succor creek with Mr. Corey riding in the pickup. Before we got to the canyon, we came to a hill overlooking it and Mr. Corey told how Succor creek was formed, the kind of rocks to be found there, etc.

Pupils Find Many Agates
 After hunting for a while, we were called in by our teachers. We then cleaned up the campsite and left for an agate bed.
 Soon after we got out of the agate beds, and there we found many agates. After a few minutes we again loaded up and headed for home.
 We were back at school by 3:30. Everybody enjoyed the trip and no injuries came about.
 Chaperones for students in our room were Mrs. Cruson, Mrs. Engstrom, Mrs. Olsen, Mrs. Reece and Mrs. Strom.
