Work Smarter ... Not Harder

OREGON'S CONSUMER PROTECTION LAW

... prompted us to check on questionable sales practices home-makers have encountered. Here are a few of the hundreds of reports we received.

A long-distance telephone caller said he was making a survey. He asked for types of appliances and car owned, husband's occupation, rural mail box number. Be wary of such calls; you don't have to answer. You might be divulging what a burglar would want to know.

Another person was offered a number of magazines "free." All she would have to do was pay postage which added up to $42. One lady was given a set of books "free" by a door-to-door salesman if she would give the names of five friends. There was to be only a small charge for printing which turned out to be $10 per month for 24 months.

We could tell you many more examples. But the moral is... Buy from an established business in your area. The big majority of merchants are honest and reliable. Be wary of those you don't know who offer "something for nothing!"

HELP YOUR CHILD

... to discriminate and increase his vocabulary. One way, suggests Mrs. Roberta Frasier, extension family life specialist at OSU, is to encourage him to describe how food tastes rather than just saying it's "good" or "icky."

If it tastes good, is it because it's sweet, sour, salty or for some other reason? If he says it's "icky," is it because it's lumpy, bitter, sour or just what doesn't the child like about it?

Likewise, you can urge him to learn other discriminating words by asking him why he likes or doesn't like a toy, article of clothing, or picture, and so on.

YELLOWED KITCHEN SINKS

... are a pesky problem you're likely to "inherit" if you move to an apartment or rented house.

Your best bet is to use a household cleanser containing bleach. Sprinkle the cleanser on the moist sink, let it stand about 15 minutes, then rinse. If the water contains rust, use a rust remover.

You'll find both liquid and powdered products for this purpose in supermarkets.
