all Hunting Season Opener Saturday, October 1; Deer, Hungarian Partridge Legal Appear Good to Excellent Based Be Hunted; Weather Is Factor

1. will be a double-barreled opening for and the choice of targets will depend on whether reference is for big game or for upland game. On that day will be buck deer, chukar Hungarian partridge, blue and ruffed grouse. The choice is obvious, but for the gunner who likes all types of shooting the choice will be a tough one to make. Undoubtedly, most hunters will choose buck deer, with this general season extending through Oct. 23 east of the Cascades and through Oct. 30 on the west side. Legal bag limit is one buck deer with visible antlers east of the mountains, and one buck deer with at least a forked antler west of the mountains.

More Crowding Expected

Last year more than 277,000 deer tags were issued; and if the annual trend of past years continues, the number will be increased by about 5 percent this coming season. So, if the hunter's favorite hunting area is a little more crowded than usual, he will know he is competing against several thousand more than a year ago.

For the shotgun enthusiast, Oct. 1 means chukar and Hungarian partridge, feathered bombshells of the rimrocks, sage and cheat-grass ranges. All gunning for these fine upland game birds is confined to eastern Oregon with no seasons scheduled for the west side.

The season is a long one, extending through Jan. 15, 1967. Bag limits are also liberal this year, with the allowable take of eight birds per day, singly or in the aggregate, 16 in possession.

Combination Trips Planned

Since chukars, Hungarians and deer live side by side on many eastern Oregon ranges, many hunters will plan combination trips and include both shotgun and rifle for the event.

Another season for shotguns which overlaps with deer is the blue and ruffed grouse season slated state-wide Oct. 1 through 23. Bag limit for blues and ruffs is three birds daily in aggregate. (Continued on Page 8)

THESE LITTLE LADIES were chosen by judges as first and second place winners in the Krazy-dressed kids' contest, sponsored by the Gate City Journal. They were selected just prior to parade time on Nyssa's seventh annual Crazy Saturday, 1966. On the left is Ronda Miller, a tamer of polar bears. In her left hand is the tongue of her small wagon bearing a cage containing tiny white kittens. They can be seen peeking out from between the bars. In her right hand she holds her tamin' whip. The other girls are artist Joan Studer (holding a dainty paint brush—about four inches wide) and her sister, Brenda, posing as a framed portrait. The prize winners are daughters of the Dick Millers and John Studers. Third place award went to Shelley Myrick and Lori Miner whose pictures, together with other young winners, will be in next week's issue. The Journal camera was toted all over town Saturday capturing photos of some really Krazy characters. These are now posted in the Journal office window. The Crazy Day parade was one of the biggest and best on record, the NHS band students played and marched beautifully and local merchants are expressing their pleasure over the success of the 1966 Crazy Day celebration.
