Tentative Rules Proposed For Big Game Enthusiasts

Oregon big game hunters will have hunting seasons quite similar to last year if the tentative regulations proposed by the Game Commission at its public hearing in Portland, Friday, May 19, are given final approval when the commission reconvenes on June 2. The seasons follow closely recommendations made by organized sportsmen's groups.

The general buck deer season as tentatively proposed will follow the traditional date nearest the first of October, which this year will be September 30. On the blacktail ranges of western Oregon the season would extend through November 5, except in the Keno and Rogue units, where the season would extend through October 29. Bucks with visible antlers would be legal in eastern Oregon, and bucks with not less than a forked antler in western Oregon.

The commission shortened the elk season in eastern Oregon by one week because of the high hunting pressure and a reduction in the number of bull elk available. As proposed, the eastern Oregon elk hunt would extend from October 28 through November 19.

Antelope hunters were given a nine-day season under the proposed rules extending from August 19 through 27. A total of 845 tags would be issued for the seven antelope hunting areas. No bighorn sheep hunt was scheduled this year, but 5 goat tags would be on schedule, with this limited season to run September 23 through 27. The bear season was set for August 12 through December 31.

FARMERS ASK US:

What are the advantages of Anhydrous Ammonia for side-dressing?

- There are five principal advantages:
1. The nitrogen is placed deep where crop roots are growing.
 2. Anhydrous ammonia is immediately available to plants and it is also a long-lasting form of nitrogen.
 3. It does not leach out of the root zone.
 4. With anhydrous ammonia application as a side-dressing, there is very little movement of the nitrogen to the top of beds where it can become unavailable.
 5. Side-dressing with anhydrous ammonia helps you assure your crops of enough nitrogen for maximum yields and profits.
