Nothing like it!

This illustration, designed to catch your eye, is slightly exaggerated. But there are many one-of-a-kind things in this world. In heating energy the standout is natural gas. Our claims for this superior fuel are not exaggerated, though we frankly admit the many advantages of natural gas sound so good we wouldn't blame you for suspecting extravagance in our language.

But facts are facts. If you are not using natural gas to heat your home, you simply are not making use of the form of energy that can do the best job at the lowest cost.

Home heat, you know, like the perfection of diamonds or the size and shape of pearls, has several degrees of value.

There is heat that gets by—just barely. Then there's another kind that is generous in certain parts of the house, but very stingy in others. Turn it up high enough and you can have heat all over. And at the end of the month you'll have a bill that will make you mad all over.

So why not have the heat that is scientifically planned for constant circulation? This is natural gas heat... heat that brings you healthful, fully fresh-air-circulated warmth throughout the area you want comfortably conditioned.

This heat — natural gas — doesn't stand around in idle stagnancy. Venting takes the old air out, brings in delightful fresh air which natural gas warms and distributes evenly. Distribution, circulation, motion... is the answer.

Natural gas heat is the heat that moves around. It goes places—goes to all the places in every room you want to heat.

Wouldn't you like natural gas heat in your home? Conversions are simple and inexpensive. And we are eager to answer your questions.

Your warmest friend is natural gas
