TVCC Players Stage 'Antigone' On Campuses Of Area Colleges

"Though I anticipated the best, it was more than I expected". This statement of ones similar has been heard since Treasure Valley Community college's run of six performances of 'Antigone', a Greek tragedy.

The "Valley Players", composed of students, faculty and citizens connected with TVCC performed at Baker on March 11 and are now preparing outings for the College of Idaho on Wednesday March 27 and for Eastern Oregon college on Friday March 29.

Though drama productions have received critical acclaim and local endorsement during the past two years, this marks a first for off campus stagings.

Outstanding performances have been given by the four lead characters. Kay Tarter, a freshman from Weiser, plays Antigone. In doing so she has mastered more than 500 lines which is an incredible task since she is playing in her first drama role. Nevertheless Kay has turned out to be a versatile actress since she must call upon varying moods throughout the play.

The story is told by a character unique to Greek tragedies, 'Chorus.' This role is played to professional standards according to some observers, by Bill Schroeder, a Vale attorney.

His powerful flawless delivery and persuasive gestures have captivated each audience.

Ed Haynes, dean of instruction at TVCC, plays the part of Creon, a dictator-king. Though Creon is seen as the villain by many, some members of each audience have expressed the belief that the real tragedy rests upon his shoulders.

Strutting, blustering moments are punctuated by schizoid actors which include moments of tenderness which Haynes performs most convincingly.

In a character part Sam Johnson, sophomore from Weiser, has won audience approval in every outing. With shaven head, jutting jaw and massive torso, Johnson's acting of First Guard is totally believable as he cowers in front of Creon and later man-handles Antigone in a boastful way for the benefit of the other guards.

Admission to the 8:15 p.m. performance in College of Idaho's Jewett Auditorium will be by complimentary ticket only. Tickets are available at the College of Idaho bookstore.

Reservations may also be made by contacting Lou Gasca at Treasure Valley Community College.
