U Of O Official Cites Increase In Law Students

The country is experiencing a "lawyer boom", according to Chapin Clark, acting dean of the University of Oregon Law School, who also claims that the need for lawyers is greater than ever before.

Twice as many students are enrolled this year in law schools throughout the United States as in 1960, Clark points out.

The Oregon Law School has doubled its enrollment since 1962, and Clark predicts that it will double again before 1975, if adequate facilities can be provided to serve 500 students.
