

NORENE SMITH

CINDY TRACY

Nyssa school officials have informed the Journal that two seniors, Norene Smith and Cindy Tracy, have been chosen as recipients of full tuition scholarships to Lady Catherine Beauty college in Boise. The scholarships are given to deserving qualified students who plan to study cosmetology.

The NHS graduates will receive training at the beauty college which will extend over a period of thirteen months to prepare them to take their state board examination in either Idaho or Oregon. The examination is a prerequisite for pursuing the vocation of cosmetology.

Both students have been planning to attend Lady Catherine and recently made a trip to Boise to observe the program offered by the school.

Norene is a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Charles W. Smith of

OSU TEACHER GRADS FIND HIGHER PAY, MORE COMPETITION

Higher pay scales in Oregon public schools have encouraged former teachers to get back into teaching. Couple this with the fact that increasingly more undergraduates are going into teaching and the picture is that there could be more applicants than teaching jobs.

Although there are likely to be nearly as many teacher openings this year as last, there are considerably more teacher candidates, according to Mrs. Kathryn Smith, director of teacher placement at Oregon State University.

She cited an apparent slowdown in job transfer and mobility among presently-employed teachers.

Nine-month starting teacher salaries are up for the 1968-69 school year to a new high range of $5,900-$6,800. The average Nyssa. While in high school, she has been active in the chorus, drill team, FHA and debate, as well as the Girl Scout organization.

Cindy is a daughter of Nyssans Mr. and Mrs. Marion Tracy. While attending NHS, she has been active in band, chorus, FHA and Pep Club. She served as secretary for the band in 1967. Outside of school, Cindy has been active in Job's Daughters for seven years and participated in Girl Scout activities for six years.

for a starting teacher with a four-year bachelor's degree will probably be about $6,200, she explained.

Candidates with master's degrees generally earn an additional $200 for first year teaching.

Teacher shortages continue to exist in select fields.

These, Mrs. Smith explained, are industrial arts, agriculture, girls physical education, advanced mathematics-physical chemistry, women's guidance and developmental reading. In addition, Oregon school districts are again asking for more men teachers for elementary schools.

The OSU placement director noted an oversupply of teacher candidates in the fields of speech, social sciences, boys physical education and biology.

Requests for highly-trained teachers for community-junior and four-year college are coming to the OSU teacher placement office from across the nation, Mrs. Smith said. In nearly every case, the colleges demand a minimum of a master's degree in the subject matter field to be taught.

Almost one-third of OSU's graduates go into teaching each year and some 400 school district superintendents and college officials use the OSU teacher placement bureau annually.

OSU Will Pass 50,000 Degree Total In June

The 50,000-degree mark will be passed by Oregon State University at its 99th annual commencement Sunday, June 2.

The total through 1967 was 49,597, including 384 "certificates" awarded during the early years of the university, Oregon's oldest state-supported institution of higher learning.

One-seventh of the 49,597 degrees have been conferred during the past three years by President James H. Jensen, including a record 2,441 last June. This year's total will be considerably larger.

OSU granted its first three degrees in June 1870, but it took until 1890 to reach the 100-degree mark. The first graduating class to number more than 1,000 was the post-World War II veteran-filled class of 1948.

More students have been graduated since 1955 than during the previous 85 years, university officials pointed out in noting the tremendous advances in Oregon education.

Now in its 100th year, OSU will officially begin its Centennial Observance this fall. The "Class of the Century" will be graduated a year from now.
