

State Extension Agent Tells 4-H Summer School Activities

The annual 4-H Summer School at Oregon State University brought to Corvallis, in addition to some 1,900 teenagers, a talented group of adult teachers.

According to Miss Ruth Brasher, State Extension Agent for 4-H, outstanding people from industry have again volunteered their services to conduct classes for the 13- to 18-year-olds who are attending the week long session which ends June 15.

Among the 175 instructors - OSU faculty, county extension agents, high school teachers and others - are 30 commercial representatives who will be in Corvallis to teach a wide variety of classes.

New this year, reports Miss Brasher, is a series of career exploration discussions to be led by members of the Marketing Executives Club of Portland.

W. O. Traphagen, district manager of Remington Rand Office Systems, Jack Webb, district sales manager for Eastern Airlines, and Jack Johnson, sales manager of J. I. Case Company will be on hand for the Tuesday class.

Wednesday, George Bach of Hobart Sales and Service, Lyle W. Salquist, western regional manager of Chapman Chemical Company, and Larry Pendergrass, sales manager of 3M Corporation, take their turn in the discussion of career opportunities in the business world.

A. John Charles, sales manager for Addressograph-Multi-graph, John Herman of Jantzen, Inc. and James Rickey, president of Sales Training, will take over the 4-H club career class on Thursday.

Friday's speakers John D. Shipley, manager of passenger sales for Continental Airlines, Mel Brown, manager of Hertz Corporation, and Matthew Dutton of Contacts Influential and Newcomers Service complete the roster of high-echelon Portland executives who have volunteered as 4-H Club Summer School teachers.

Other commercial concerns have supported the 4-H program over many years, Miss Brasher noted. A number of companies send home economists to conduct classes in modeling and grooming, wardrobe selection and care, sewing and food preparation. This year, Miss Kay Cheney, an OSU graduate and former 4-H Club member, is coming from Seattle as the representative of the Unique Zipper Company to teach one of the 4-H Club classes.

Traffic Deaths Highest In May

Oregon businesses contribute entertainment as well as education. The Oregon Bankers Association is bringing "Sing Out Portland, Up with People," a singing program, for the youngsters' Wednesday evening fun. Refreshments for the post-hootenanny parties Thursday night are provided by the Portland Bottling Company.

In addition to developing knowledge and skills, and providing the experience of living and sharing with other young people, 4-H Summer School serves still another purpose, according to Miss Brasher.

"Many young people have indicated that the goal of a college education, or other training beyond high school, became a real goal as a result of their experience at 4-H Summer School."

This is the 53rd year the event has been held at Oregon State University.

There were 55 traffic deaths reported to the Oregon Department of Motor Vehicles during May. It was the highest death toll reported so far this year. The previous month, April, recorded 53 deaths.

The May figure, which is subject to revision if persons injured in May die at a later date, brought the state's year-to-date death toll to 236, 22 fewer deaths than for the same period in 1967.

There were nine multiple death accidents during the month, with two of these each claiming four lives.

The May toll included six persons killed during the last two days of the month as part of the Memorial day holiday toll. The holiday period, including the first two days in June, resulted in 13 Oregon traffic deaths.

Fatalities are reported immediately by teletype to the department, with formal police reports submitted at a later date.
