WORK SMARTER - NOT HARDER

COLD WATER DETERGENTS help keep colors bright and prevent shrinkage, but killing bacteria is another matter.

Tests with one family's wash show that 20,000 bacteria per square inch survived cold water washes compared to only 600 in a hot wash. Bacteriologists at the U.S. Department of Agriculture made this study.
But there is a way -- at least with white cottons. When chlorine bleach was added to the wash cycle, the bacteria were cut to 40 or less per square inch regardless of water temperature.
Cold water detergent can also be used in hot water and has been found to do a good cleaning job. Hot water also helps cut bacteria count.

MUCH AS WE DISLIKE HAVING ANYONE BELITTLE a busy homemaker, we heard of an instance which illustrates an important practical point.
It seems that a lady called a service man and asked for some new felt pads for her clothes dryer. It dried slowly and she thought new pads might speed up the job.
In the three years since she bought the dryer, the lint trap had not once been cleaned. The collection in the trap looked like a felt pad.
So, we emphasize, empty the lint trap regularly. Failure to do so will slow down drying. This information and many other worthwhile suggestions are in the instruction book.
