Governor McCall Endorses Quality Products' Symbol

Governor Tom McCall has endorsed a new symbol designed to distinguish quality Oregon products.

Speaking before a throng of 180 of the state's business leaders at the recent Agri-Business Council conference in Portland (July 17), Governor McCall predicted that the "Landmark of Quality", a symbol bearing an outline of the State of Oregon, would soon be known throughout the world.

He compared the new state symbol with that of the silver maker's hallmark, noting that the Landmark of Quality is intended to create a strong consumer desire for quality Oregon products.

Marion T. Weatherford, president of the Council, thanked the Governor for calling the conference. "Miss Landmark of Quality," Judy McDermott, then presented Governor McCall with an attache case, making him an official Agri-Business Council Ambassador.

Conference chairman, Dick Turner, introduced a panel of experts who discussed various aspects of the Landmark of Quality program in detail.

Walter Leth, State Director of Agriculture, said the program is a "natural" for Oregon since so many outstanding products are produced here. He lauded the state's growers and processors for establishing high quality standards. He noted that every segment of business in Oregon has a stake in the Landmark program.

Harry Moss, regional manager for Almagamat Sugar, explained how the symbol could be used on letterheads, company checks, store displays, advertising material and trucks.

Jack L. Meier, president of Meier and Frank Company, told the audience that the symbol could increase sales which would keep Oregon dollars rolling in from all parts of the country. He noted that this would provide more local jobs, and broaden the Oregon tax load.

J. Glatt, of the State Department of Agriculture, said that the program could be used by individual commodity commissions in Oregon, as well as by processors and manufacturers. He observed that the first user was a commodity commission, the growers of orchardgrass seed.

Carl Hatfield Jr., public relations director for the Agri-Business Council, discussed the promotional plans for the program including newspapers, magazines, radio, television and billboards. He said, "If the information we generate has genuine news value, I'm certain we can count on the support of our fine newspapers and magazines."

It was noted that the Landmark of Quality symbol will be authorized for use by several groups in the near future. Products must meet rigid standards established by the Agri-Business Council before being permitted to use the registered Landmark of Quality symbol.
