

THE MESSAGE ON THIS CAKE, "In Appreciation To A Wonderful Scout Master" nearly tells the story of some of the refreshments served at the August 10 Eagle Court of Honor, Troop 419. The most important part of the story, however, is now revealed. The recipient is TOM NISHITANI. A similar sheet-cake was also on hand, and it was decorated with a large Eagle.

It's Your Law!

"You Can't Cancel My Hospital Policy!"

When Charlie applied for a hospitalization insurance policy he read the usual question -- "Have you consulted with or been attended by a physician within the past five years?" In his reply, Charlie mentioned a physical examination and some minor surgery he'd undergone seven years before. He did not mention, however, some recent examinations by a doctor. These examinations indicated Charlie had heart trouble and other physical problems. The doctor recommended surgery, but Charlie refused to undergo it.

With the information given it, the application for the insurance was approved and a policy issued.

Later, Charlie made a claim against the policy for medical services. In its investigations of the claim, the company discovered the unmentioned medical treatments and problem. The company offered to return to Charlie the amount of premiums he had paid together with interest and said that it was canceling the policy.

"You can't cancel my policy, I refuse to accept your offer," Charlie replied. The case went to court.

The insurance company argued that Charlie fraudulently made application for a policy and that the company would not have approved it, if it had known Charlie's heart condition and other physical problems. "I didn't intentionally conceal these treatments--I forgot about them," was Charlie's reply.

The Court, however, ruled in favor of the insurance company. The omission was material. The company was entitled to have the policy voided. The law recognizes that insurance contracts require the utmost of good faith. The company had to look to Charlie for the information on which to consider the issuance of a policy. The Court held Charlie's negative answers were wilfully false and fraudulently made, because his treatments were for a serious disorder that couldn't be overlooked.

ORE-IDA COUNCIL PREPARES FOR NATIONAL SCOUT EVENT

The local chairman Rex O'Laughlin has announced that preparations for the 1969 National Boy Scout Jamboree to be held at Farragut, Idaho, July 16 through 26 are underway.

The following men will serve on the local Jamboree Committee for one year: Marvin Latpiech - Equipment; Bill Tate-Transportation; Robert W. Cooper - Finance; Floyd Fletcher - Training; Lowell O. Asher - Public Relations; John Warnick - Recording Secretary; and Henry Falkner - Council President.

The Council has received notice that its contingent will be two troops, consisting of six adult leaders and seventy-four boys. Applications have been sent out to men meeting national requirements as boy leaders.

The requirements for boys are: (1) They must be 12 years of age or over before September 1, 1968, and not have reached their 18th birthday prior to July 26, 1969. (2) Boy Scouts must attain a minimum rank of Star Scout before April 1, 1969; and Explorer Scouts must meet the Five Exploring Experiences as stated in their manual. Both must be recommended and approved by their local Scoutmaster and Committee Chairman.

Local Scoutmasters have been notified of these requirements and are to pick up applications for boys in their troop wishing to attend the Jamboree. All applications must be accompanied by a $20 reservation fee which is refundable if the boy is not selected.

The estimated cost per boy is between $150 and $170 which includes the $60 Jamboree fee and his equipment, food, insurance, transportation to and from the Jamboree for him and all of his equipment.

Boys will be interviewed personally by the Jamboree Scoutmasters and then approved by the local committee. These interviews will start in September of this year. Troops will then be established in January, 1969, with meetings every other week until June, 1969, when a shake-down camp will be held for final preparation for the Jamboree.

A standby unit will be organized to fill vacancies for boys who have been selected but cannot attend. There is a hope that this unit will be used to fill contingents from other councils that cannot meet their quotas.

Due to distances involved, previous Jamborees have cost boys $350 to $500.

The United States will have to increase food production by 30 percent within the next two decades to maintain its current level of consumption. Agri-Business Council says that proportionally a larger share will have to be grown by the Oregon farmer.

A sense of values is the most important single element in human personality.

Let discouragement harden your determination, never your heart.

WORK SMARTER - NOT HARDER

METALLIC TRIMS ON HOUSEHOLD LINENS and ready-to-wear used today are more durable than those of the past, which tended to tarnish. Elaine Carlson, Oregon State University Extension clothing specialist, points out that the modern metallic yarns are more flexible and are color-fast to both sunlight and washing.

It's advisable to turn washable garments inside out during sudsing and rinsing in order to protect the outer surface from abrasion. If ironing is required, set the iron thermostat at a low temperature. To be safe, read the labels which come with these items. They are not all alike.

7,000 ACRES SEED ALFALFA BEING CHECKED IN MALHEUR

Seed Certification inspectors from Oregon State University started field examination of Malheur County's alfalfa seed crop this week according to Leeds Bailey, County Extension Agent. He says that about 7,000 acres of the crop are entered for certification this year. This acreage is about the same as that entered in 1967.

Malheur County growers will certify a record 17 different varieties of alfalfa this year. The leading alfalfa is Vernal which will produce 4500 acres. Second in acreage is Ranger with 1,000 acres while Narragansett claims 850 acres. The rest of the acreage is distributed between the remaining 14 varieties.

Bailey says that the red clover acreage entered for certification is at an all time low. Only 21 acres of the Pennscott variety are registered in the program this year.

GRASS SEED DATA GIVEN BY AGRIBUSINESS COUNCIL

One of Oregon's most important agricultural industries, the growing and marketing of premium quality grass seeds, also causes its share of trouble.

According to the Agri-Business Council, the state's grass seed growers account for 30 per cent of the nation's seed production. This top quality seed is marketed throughout the world.

The seed industry returns more than $30 million each year to the growers. Most of this income comes from seed sales outside the state, providing an estimated $200 million boost to the Oregon economy as it multiplies through wages, purchases of equipment and supplies, investments and taxes.

The trouble comes each summer after the harvest when the fields are burned.

Nobody like field burning, including the farmers who must do it. It's a hard, dirty, nerve-racking job.

Yet, plant pathologists with the U.S. Department of Agriculture predict that diseases would wipe out the industry within two years if the fields were not burned.

In addition to controlling plant diseases, field burning also helps kill insects, destroy rodents, control weeds, promote better yields by thinning, and reduce the hazard of wildfires.

Ranking first nationally in the seed production of ryegrass, bentgrass, Kentucky bluegrass, chewing fescue, red fescue, and orchardgrass, the seed growers of Oregon have an immense investment to protect and they recognize their obligation to make the burning as unobjectionable as possible.

The Seed League has taken the lead in this endeavor. Realizing that field burning is the only way to control silver top, most of the 125 grass rusts, and many of the 400 leaf and stem diseases, the Seed League organized a voluntary burning schedule in 1964 to help minimize the smoke problem.

Last year, the voluntary program was tightened up and made mandatory by law. Growers burn only on days when forecasts determine good smoke dispersal. The U.S. Weather Bureau, State Sanitary Authority, State Fire Marshal, and local fire districts work together to determine the best times to burn. The growers are then advised of the prevailing conditions on a daily basis.

Charles Kizer, director of the Agri-Business Council and a grass seed grower in Harrisburg, said the Seed League is busily sponsoring research to find alternate production methods. Chemicals are being tested, and work is being done to find seed varieties that are resistant to disease. Several residue disposal plans are being explored. The results are encouraging, but far from conclusive.

"With all the miracles of modern research," Kizer added, "we still do not have chemicals to control the major diseases that attack our grass fields."
