Safety Is Watchword For Nation's 4-H's

"Watch Out for Children!" Because it's back to school for the nation's 51 million elementary and high school students. Among the 9 to 19 year olds are more than half a million 4-H boys and girls who have a special interest in safety. They carry on safety projects to prove it.

These safety-minded youngsters work hard for school and community safety, and for home and personal safety as well. Their projects include campaigns to find and correct hazards that may cause injuries to pedestrians and motorists alike. Hazard hunts turn up articles left lying around the yard, along highways, on playgrounds and in parks.

Through their efforts to publicize and dramatize safety, the 4-H's create posters, exhibits, appear on radio and television, and cooperate with local authorities. Older teens serve as junior safety club leaders and help young members with their projects.

Observing bicycle safety and abiding by safety rules in sports and play are high on the list. Encouragement and recognition for safety efforts come from the Cooperative Extension Service, which supervises the national 4-H Safety program, and from the sponsor, General Motors.

By October 15, youths from 50 states will be named 1968 state award winners and delegates to the National 4-H Congress in Chicago, December 1-5. More than 4,000 will earn the county safety medal. The top 10 clubs in the state will receive safety certificates.

The big national prize is a $1,000 educational scholarship, which will be awarded to eight of the state 4-H winners who have compiled the most exceptional records of safety projects conducted over a period of years.

To be eligible for either a state or national safety award, the boy or girl must be over 14 years old.

Major reasons for suspension involve failure to comply with the state's financial responsibility laws, driving while intoxicated, and driving while license suspended.

TRAFFIC COURT CONVICTIONS ON INCREASE

More than 208,500 traffic court convictions, about 980 per day, were reported to the Oregon Department of Motor Vehicles during the first seven months of 1968.

That's a 4.3 per cent increase over 1967, according to Vern L. Hill, director. During July, the most recent month tallied, there were 31,612 convictions reported, 5,495 more than for that month last year.

The department's July activity report indicates it issued 4,305 mandatory driver license suspensions during the month, bringing the total for the year to 26,615. In addition, 385 suspensions were issued during the month based on court recommendations and discretionary authority of the department, bringing total suspensions of this type for the year to date to 2,604. Both figures represent slight decreases from last year.
