

AN OREGON STATE UNIVERSITY RESEARCH IS BEING CONDUCTED in the Willamette Valley on non-smokers. A research team will give tests to members of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints because of their non-smoking beliefs and because they reside in areas free from air pollution. Research Assistant Frances Seuell of Nyssa tests a machine called the spirometer, while Project Director Dr. LaVon Johnson of OSU looks on. The study is to find out if non-smokers have superior lung functions as compared to smokers. - OSU News Bureau Photo.

Myers Opposes Withdrawal Of Candidates

Presidential candidates "generally advocated or recognized by national news media" should not be allowed to withdraw from the Oregon primary, Secretary of State Clay Myers declared in a recent address before a University of Portland seminar on political science.

Speaking as the state's chief elections officer, Myers said he will propose such a change to the next session of the legislature. He said the voters of Oregon, not the candidates, should have the option and he noted that in recent elections Adlai Stevenson, George Romney and Nelson Rockefeller filed affidavits removing their names from the Oregon ballot.

Myers said he will again ask the legislature to eliminate vice presidential candidates from the ballot, as in the last eight years one-half million "meaningless votes" have been counted for that office.

The state official says he will also seek certain changes in the selection of delegates, including an increase in filing fees, trimming ballot slogans to one word - either the name of the candidate they support or "Uncommitted," and elimination of cheap advertising for delegates in the Voters' Pamphlet.

These steps, Myers said, would go a long way toward shortening the Oregon ballot, would speed up the election and counting process and would still allow Oregon to maintain its presidential preferential primary as one of the most significant in the nation.
