BUCKLE UP CHILDREN RIDING IN AUTOS

Holding your child on your lap can be one of the worst things you can do! Mothers holding a child while riding in an auto could crush the child against the seat back or instrument panel in the event of an accident, the Oregon Traffic Safety Commission said recently.

"Parents think by holding the child they are protecting him, but actually the force of the impact can slam both of them against the interior portion of the car or hurl them from the vehicle," a spokesman said. "Both adults and children should be contained by their own separate safety belt."

The commission also took the opportunity to caution holiday shoppers who load the car with Christmas packages and then have to hold the child for lack of room.

"The thought that they are literally endangering their child's safety, as well as their own, never crosses their mind," the spokesman said. According to the Commission, the chances of having an accident increase during the hustle and bustle of the holiday season. This coupled with poor weather conditions spell treachery.

"Whatever the purpose of your holiday trip, your child should never be allowed to stand or sit in the front or rear seat without a restraining device, the spokesman explained. A quick stop could hurl the child against the window or dash.

THE first, and most obvious, precaution: Lock your car and take your keys. About one out of three stolen cars would not have been taken if the owner had followed that procedure.

Keep all packages and valuables out of sight, preferably in the trunk. A professional "booster" - car burglar - can open most locked car doors in less than 20 seconds. Valuable items left on car seats are often too tempting to ignore.

Park the car where it may easily be seen.

Besides the measurable loss of property caused by thefts, there is another pressing reason to protect cars from theft, Halm pointed out.

About half of the car thieves arrested are juveniles. Many of them made car theft their first serious crime.

"Furthermore," Halm said, "one out of six stolen cars is involved in an accident. This rate is 200 times greater than normal. It is every citizen's responsibility to guard himself and others against this needless loss."
