NEW ZEALAND NIECE VISITS NYSSA COUPLE

An interesting 18-year-old Miss, Iete VanderOord, from Nelson, New Zealand is spending ten days with her uncle and aunt, Pete and Anna VanderOord in Nyssa. She is a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Jacob VanderOord and has never seen her Nyssa relatives before. In fact the VanderOord brothers, Pete and Jacob, have not seen each other for 39 years.

Iete (pronounced Eeta, with a long E) left New Zealand on June 11, spent a day in Honolulu and arrived June 12 at the Boise airport where she was met by the VanderOords. The speedy trip was partially due to crossing the international date line.

She is enroute to Holland, where she was born and resided until 13 years of age when the family moved to New Zealand. The plane trip will take her nearly a round the world. She will have a stop in Montreal and plans to spend several days in London where she will visit the cousin of a New Zealand friend. While in Holland, she will visit her maternal grandmother, other relatives and childhood friends.

It is now the winter season in New Zealand, and when Iete left on her trip it was 16 degrees above zero. She says there is no drastic change of seasons in her country - it never seems as hot nor as cold as in the United States. The seasons seem to blend into each other.

Miss VanderOord has one brother, Peter, 21. At the age of 18, she has completed her college education and has worked for one and one-half years for a travel agency. One purpose of her trip is to learn more about traveling to the various countries she will be visiting.

In this country, it seems incredible that an 18-year-old Miss has graduated from college and has worked for one and one-half years, but in Holland students have only an annual three-week vacation from school and in New Zealand the vacation time is from six to seven weeks, so their education is almost continuous.

When asked by a Journal reporter to relate some of the differences in her country and the United States, Miss Vander-

Oord said the people here seem to be so interested in other nations, while most New Zealanders seem concerned mostly with their country and England. She stated that people there are polite, but they do not reflect the friendliness she finds here. New Zealand, she says, does not seem as progressive. Television is only about 10 years old there and they have only black and white pictures. Meats and groceries are purchased more 'wholesale' style and in larger quantities. They have no small food packages on the grocery store shelves, and a milkman still delivers his products to the door.

Principal crops in her country are hops, tobacco and fleshy fruits, including apples, pears and peaches; and it is good sheep country, with a brush-covered hilly terrain. So this area's green crops of sugar beets, potatoes, onions, etc. are a real novelty to her.

Iete says her father and Uncle Pete are much alike in both looks and actions; and knowing the VanderOords, this reporter's guess is that they have made her feel right at home. They are trying to show her the country and visit the various business houses. She says she is learning much by listening to and visiting with residents of the Nyssa area. And of course the trio will go bowling.

Americans used to shout, "Give me liberty!" Now they just leave off the last word.
