CHANGE HABITS AND CHANGE LUCK

Fish are like people. They get set in their ways and don't like to make changes. Patterns of life are rigorously followed until something forces a change in habits.

This human-like trait leads to some drastic differences in fish behavior during the hot weeks of summer. The normal ways of fishing usually don't produce during summer doldrums, yet many anglers stick to their set habits and give up fishing until the weather and the water cool.

By calling it quits, they're probably missing some good fishing. Say the angling authorities at Mercury Outdoors. What they should do is change their habits along with the fish.

To begin, start getting out on the lake before the sun comes up, and be there again when it goes down. Skip the hot hours in between, for in many parts of the country fish prefer to feed early and late... when the water is cool.

Fish will change what they eat, too. Summer is the time of insects - grasshoppers, crickets, ants and a multitude of other delectable (to fish, of course) foods. Artificial lures will be passed up in favor of these natural foods.

A third consideration is where to fish. Since the supply of natural food is most abundant in shallow water, that is where the action will be.

Live baits and shall water dictate a change in fishing methods. No heavy trolling or plug casting rods now. The fishing gang at Mercury advise that the situation calls for light-weight fly or spin casting tackle, with light lines and fine wire hooks.

Mosquitoes are a nuisance in Canada and Alaska only about 6 weeks out of each year -- about June 1 to July 15.
