It was late in the afternoon and we were tired of driving so we stopped at Browning, Montana. Browning is the headquarters of the Blackfoot Indians and has an excellent museum of the Indian culture. Other than these two items the town really didn't have a lot to whoop about. We had a motel room that was just barely big enough for us to move in but that was all, but since we were only staying there for the night and had no intentions of making it our permanent home it was ample. We went to one of the town's leading restaurants. The waitress was pleasant and tried her very best to make us happy but had little to work with. Everything was pointing toward a very dreary evening but such was not to be the case. Some folks who were staying at the same motel sat at the adjoining booth and we struck up a conversation. It was a spirited conversation such as, "My but it's hot". Ugh, huh do you think it will rain?". "I dunno but it might." "My but it's hot." Well we paid our bill and went back to the overheated room. A group of young people were singing folk songs across the roadway at a curio store and we found this to be entertaining but they soon quit. Then the folks next door came from the restaurant and our wives decided to go over to the store and see if there was any loot they wanted to buy for the kids back home. When our wives came back they found their husbands in one of the rooms quenching their thirst with a couple of cooling Manhattans. Their name was Kelly and they lived in New York, we lived in New Meadows. This gave us something in common we both lived in a place that was New. Ruth and I are protestants, they are Catholics. He belonged to the Knights of Columbus and I am a Mason. Ruth and Helen were showing each other their brag books of their grandchildren. John and I were talking about fire departments. I'm an ex-firechief of New Meadows and he's a retired brigade captain from the Bronx, we talked of fire axes, fog nozzles and playpipes. We all talked of places we had been and where we would like to go. Suddenly we noticed that it was 11:30 and that we had spent a delightful evening with two people we met as absolute strangers and in a few hours left as friends. You know--there are nice people all over the world and if you are friendly you will probably meet friendly people.
