

Idaho Power's Old, New Chairmen

T.E. Roach, left, retired Idaho Power Company board chairman, saw his greatest goal realized when he switched on huge Hells Canyon Dam generators at completion of three-project developments bearing his name.

Albert Carlsen, new board chairman succeeding Roach, brings to the top management post broad business experience and full awareness of the utility's responsibility to serve its customers wisely and well.

Carlsen, stepping to stage center as Idaho Power board chairman, has a tough act to follow. For under Roach's firm, practiced leadership, the utility took giant-sized strides of growth to pace its area's own economic emergence.
But the past era's progress may be merely prologue to even greater growth for Idaho Power--and the Snake River Valley--in the era now beginning. Carlsen, one of whose chief characteristics is a sound and healthy optimism, pointed to the exciting possibilities for both the company and its area in addressing the annual shareholder meeting.
