Agricultural Scientist Shows Prize Winning Wheat

Dr. Norman Borlaug, the Iowa born agricultural scientist who won the Nobel Peace Prize for his development of a high-producing strain of wheat, explains qualities of the new plant to President Nixon and Secretary of Agriculture Clifford M. Hardin. The President paid tribute to Dr. Borlaug as a means of honoring all farm researchers for their contributions to agriculture progress.

In his remarks, the President re-emphasized his determination to see that America's farmers receive a fairer share of America's increasing prosperity.

The wheat was displayed on the White House South Lawn as part of an exhibit on agriculture during the day-long "Salute to Agriculture" in Washington on Friday, May 7.

WORK SMARTER - NOT HARDER

There is magic for children in a piece of string. It can serve as a way to get people acquainted, relieve boredom on a long trip, get brothers and sisters to cooperate with one another and provide fun experiences for all ages. This magic quality of string comes forth when you play some simple string games that were popular years ago.

If you don't remember how to play, find someone of the older generation who can share the magic of a piece of string with you.

A good rule of thumb is to cut the string as long as the person is tall. Tie the ends in a square loop and you are ready for some fun. You can make a "cat's cradle," "Jacob's ladder," "crow's foot" or "See Saw" to name only a few.

MOTHERS OF YOUNG CHILDREN can take a tip from preschool teachers and set up some special activity for morning or afternoon play. One day it may be the puzzles put on the table, another day, try papers and crayons. Or bring out a few toys which have been put away for awhile.

If children shy away from milk, try to make it a more exciting drink. Add mashed fruit such as a banana or a peach and thoroughly mix or give it a whirl in the blender. Let your imagination be your guide. Other additions might be molasses or honey mixed with peanut butter or chocolate syrup. Half milk and half fruit juice appeals to many children.

FOR ASPHALT TILE FLOORS

always use a self-polishing wax -- never a polishing wax. The latter contains a solvent which tends to soften the surface and cause smearing of colors.

Read the label on the can of wax before you buy. This will tell you the type of flooring on which it can be used.

CLEANING KITCHEN CARPET is basically the same as cleaning other carpet. It will need to be vacuumed more often.

Mop up spills at once. Sponge with detergent suds and blot dry with paper towels or cloth. Spilled grease must be removed with a grease dissolving fluid (dry cleaning fluid). Use care, many are flammable.

What is Silicone finish used on cookware? This is a finish, somewhat like fluorocarbon resin (such as Teflon) but has some of the characteristics of glass. It is less costly than Teflon but scratches easily and discolors if not properly cleaned.
