NEW MACHINE HARVESTING ONION SEED

This is a converted combine which has been re-built into an onion seed harvester by Dessert Seed Company. There are only two of them known to be in existence. A four row and this six row machine. It was shipped by truck from El Centro, Calif., here for the fall harvest of onion seed. This machine has a total of eight hydraulic motors and four oil pumps. The "bull rows" are still cut by hand and then the machine cuts the seed and transfers it into the power box wagons.

The first picture shows a close up of the front of the machine in operation. The second picture is the onion seed going up the conveyor to the power wagon. The third picture shows the onion seed drying on long canvas. These have to be hand turned each day to dry evenly and then are combined. This is one time of the year the employees don't like to see it rain, as if a cloud is sighted everyone rushes to cover the onion seed.

Former Nyssa Educator Receives Fellowship

Dr. Louis W. Attebery has received the Bruern Fellowship in American Literature at Leeds, England for the 1971-72 academic year, according to Leeds University Registrar J.V. Loach.

Attebery, chairman of the College of Idaho English department, will take sabbatical leave from the college, and with his family, will depart for Europe September 1.

Under the terms of the Bruern Fellowship in American Literature, Attebery will conduct a graduate seminar in the Literature of the American West, drawing from a course he has taught at the C of I for five years. Included in the fellowship are an honorarium and travel expenses and the prerogative of undertaking work in the Institute of Folk Life Studies.

Considered an authority in the field of folklore, Attebery has been a constant contributor of articles in the Northwest and the nation. He also has had published in professional journals several reviews of books of western Americana. He is a member of the executive council of Western Literature Association and is Idaho editor of the periodical "Northwest Folklore." His interest in the subject led Attebery to originate a Folklore Archive at the C of I.

He is a 1950 alumnus of the C of I and returned as a faculty member in 1961, moving to his position as chairman of the English department in 1968. He also has served as principal lecturer in the American Studies program at the college in summer sessions for ten years and has been coordinator of the six-week winter session since its inception. Attebery received the "Outstanding Professor" award at the C of I in the 1966-67 school year.

Attebery earned his master's degree at Montana State University where he served also as graduate assistant. His Ph.D. dissertation and will replace Dr. J. Raymond Lord will serve as adjunct associate professor in the college English department and will replace Dr. J. Raymond Lord will serve versity of Denver with his doctoral dissertation entitled "Folklore of the Lower Snake River Valley: A Regional Study." Attebery had taught high school English in Middleton, Payette, Nyssa, and in Denver's East High where he was chairman of the department, prior to joining the C of I.

He will be accompanied to England by his family who anticipate a heavy sightseeing schedule. His wife, the former Barbara Olson of Payette and a C of I alumna, is a private piano teacher, organist for the local Methodist Church; and was organist at the Lakewood Congregational Church during their stay in Denver. Their daughter Bobby graduated last spring from the University of Oregon and worked in Portland this summer. Brian, their son, is an accomplished cellist and will take his instrument to England for possible further instruction there. He completed his freshman year at the C of I.

During the sabbatical leave, Dr. J. Raymond Lord will serve as adjunct associate professor in the college English department and will replace Dr. J. Raymond Lord will serve
