Waterfowl Tally Tops Half Million Mark

Well over a half-million ducks and geese were tallied in Oregon's midwinter migratory waterfowl inventory conducted earlier in January in a cooperative statewide project involving men and equipment from the Oregon Game Commission and the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service.

According to Chet Kebbe, who heads the Commission's waterfowl management program, the last time a concentration of waterfowl this large wintered in the state was in 1962 when more than 700,000 birds were tallied.

The total waterfowl count was 585,200, well above the 485,400 birds tallied in 1970. The count was made on all major marshland areas of the state as well as several major streams on which the birds concentrate.

The duck tally was just over 459,300. Of these about 180,500 were mallards, 136,200 pintails, 59,800 widgeon, and the remainder mostly teal, scaup, buffleheads, ruddy ducks, and canvasbacks. Nineteen species of ducks were recorded wintering in the state. Except for 17 harlequin and 4 old squaw, no unusual migrants were observed.

The goose population totaled just under 75,300, up slightly from the previous year. Almost the entire population consisted of Canada geese. Snow geese and whitefronts had moved south prior to the inventory.

Biologists also tallied eagles observed on the inventory routes. A total of 126 of these majestic birds were seen, 79 bald and 47 golden.

Biologists of the two agencies completed the inventory in less than a week. The survey is tied in with the national migratory bird count taken at the same time in all states across the nation. In Oregon around 3,000 miles are traveled by foot, boat, and aircraft to make the inventory.
