SPEAKING OF BOOKS

BY CLYDE T. SWISHER
CHAIRMAN, DEPT. OF ENGLISH
NYSSA SENIOR HIGH SCHOOL

Let's start our adventure in recreational reading with a fine, fast-paced story. The book that I recommend is WHEELS by Arthur Hailey. Many of you have read other books by Arthur Hailey such as AIRPORT, which is a good fast-paced novel, and perhaps some of you read HOTEL. WHEELS is the inside exciting novel of the giant auto industry, its men, women, their lives, ambitions, successes, treacheries, ideals, disasters, and their loves.

WHEELS is a story told on many levels: of plush executive suites; of assembly plant jungles breeding violence and despair; of the way a new model car is created, and how those "in the know" make sure they get a good one; of secret design studios which outsiders would like to know about but don't; and of shady auto dealerships where the public and manufacturers get fleeced. If this isn't enough to keep you interested, then let me add other angles to which you will find responses if you read WHEELS. The novel is concerned with auto racing, its people, and the car man's credo: "Win on Sunday, sell on Monday." The novel further deals with auto advertising; its fakery and waste; and of the press and air pollution; of unions; of Detroit's inner city, its tragedies and civic shames; of crime and the Mafia's evil fingers in the auto world. And there's more, much more, in a fast-paced easily readable novel, WHEELS--perhaps the most complete and fascinating novel written about this vital virile scene of the auto industry.

State Receives Help For Mental Health

The State of Oregon has received a $1,348 million federal grant to develop a comprehensive mental health service organization of a 12-county area in eastern Oregon, Congressman Al Ullman announced Tuesday.

Ullman said the grant, from the National Institute of Mental Health, would be used to staff both in-patient and out-patient mental health clinics throughout much of eastern Oregon.

Administrative headquarters for the Eastern Oregon Comprehensive Mental Health Center, Ullman said, would be in Pendleton at the Eastern Oregon Hospital and Training Center.

He said the state is expected to hire as many as 180 employees for the program, including psychologists, social workers, educators, doctors, nurses and guidance counselors.

According to the plan the state submitted, Ullman said, it is expected that in-patient treatment facilities would be developed at Baker and La-Grande, and possibly in Burns. The only in-patient service now available is in Pendleton.

Other clinics which will be established or receive larger staffs include one in Moro, John Day, The Dalles and Hood River. A clinic is also planned for Walla Walla county.

Additional treatment is also being prepared for alcoholism and drug abuse, Ullman said. Plans also call for developing residential treatment homes for children on the Warm Springs and Umatilla Indian Reservations, Ullman said.

"I'm very pleased these funds were awarded," he said, "and I think the state should be commended for working up this comprehensive mental health service plan."

Under the program the state of Oregon must supply a declining amount of funds for several years. State expenditures for the first year of the program may run to $75,000, Ullman said.
