30 YEARS AGO

The story of how one mother and four children, a family at the local labor camp, made $95 in one week, was told here today by Clair Barrett, manager.

The family made $95 finishing the thinning of a field of beets and hoeing. At the present time, there are 84 workers out of 160 persons in the camp, including children.

Prospects indicate that the Malheur County Fair, scheduled for September will be cancelled. The fair will be cancelled because of war conservation pressure.

40 YEARS AGO

The San Diego Fruit and Produce Company shipped twenty-two carloads of peas to market last week, making a total of 72 cars to date. Warm July weather is maturing the crop rapidly. Several hundred pickers and packers are now employed in order that the peas may be shipped when they are in their prime.

It is estimated that the pea fields near Nyssa, Apple Valley and Parma will crop 85 carloads this season.

Two and one makes three, and a two-cent stamp and a one-cent stamp will suffice for one first class letter under the new postal rate requirement which goes into effect July 6, according to Dean Smith, postmaster here. The present one and two cent stamps will be as good as the new three-cent stamps which will be issued by the postoffice department.

Speaking of Books

BY CLYDE T. SWISHER

This week for your summer recreational reading, may I suggest and recommend two books dealing with the occult. Most of you readers are aware that the United States is in the midst of adventure with the occult--witchcraft, satanism, etc. If you feel that this is a "way out" statement, then I suggest that you recall some of the leading movies of this past school year that have dealt with witchcraft, satanism, exorcism, ghosts, and ghost-hunting.

The first book that I would like to suggest for your reading is THE OTHER by Thomas Tryon. The reader of THE OTHER is swept up in the life of a Connecticut country town in the 30's and in the fearful mysteries that slowly darken and overwhelm it.

Two brilliant figures stand at the center of the narrative: the handsome young twin sons of an old and respected family--Niles and Holland Perry, complicated, secretive boys, bound together in the intense fidelity of twinning. In their strangely imaginative games, for which the ancient barn and dungeonlike apple cellar serve as temple and stage, the dark-natured Holland dominates. Yet it is Niles, gentle and loving, who is gifted in the strangest game, an almost mystic game of empathy with all living creatures, which their adored grandmother, Ada, learned as a girl and has taught them.

So far from this description, the novel sounds very tame and domestic, but little by little as the games of boyhood are played, and the usual rumors, conflicts, and attachments of large families in small towns occupy and distract the Perry household, as the twins' elegant and fragile mother almost imperceptibly recedes into her private world of lending library romance, as the grandmother labors to nurture and guide her loved ones, a cloud gathers and descends over them all, until suddenly the family, the whole town, is shaken and bewildered by the advent of a horrifying series of inexplicable deaths and disasters.

I would be very foolish to tell you more about the story for in doing so I would ruin the suspense and the psychological horror story. Suffice it to say, that Mr. Tryon has written a psychological story with lyric skill and spiritual strength which will impress the reader and hold him as much as its central revelation of evil will appall him.

The novel in many ways reminded me of a 19th century classic story of evil written by Henry James: THE TURN OF THE SCREW. Many of you will recall the motion picture version which was shown on television last year.

The other book that I would like briefly to mention is titled THE EXORCIST by William Peter Blatty. This novel too deals with terror, terror in a different sort of way from that which is narrated in THE OTHER.

In the case of THE EXORCIST the story deals with a youngster who is possessed with the spirit of evil in terms of transmigration of souls. The novel reads rapidly and I found myself gripped by the narration and yet repelled by the story and the use of vulgarities. Nevertheless, if you are interested in a fast-paced exciting and terrifying story, may I suggest the EXORCIST. Hundreds of people have obviously enjoyed THE EXORCIST because there are more than 200,000 copies in hardback; the paperback is just out which will attract many more readers and it is soon to become a major motion picture. At this time the book is a little more than a year old and has remained on the top ten best seller list.

Graphoanalysis

By ELLEN JONES

It doesn't matter which hand or foot you use in writing. Your personality picture will be the same, even if you write by holding a brush or pen in your teeth.

Illustration #1 was written by a naturally left-handed person in the usual manner from left to right and using the right hand.

Illustration #2, the mirror-writing, was written by the same person using the left hand and writing from right to left.

Both show rhythm, exploratory thinking, practical goals, organizational ability, attention to detail, generosity and many other traits.

By using a mirror to view #2 it is possible to compare the similarity of strokes in "r" crossings indicating goals, the balanced "f" showing organizational ability, careful dotting of "i", indicating attention to detail.
