Anglers Report Record Salmon, Steelhead Catch

Oregon sport fishermen landed a record number of salmon and steelhead in 1971, according to Reino Koski, staff biologist of the Game Commission.

From information provided by anglers, the catch of salmon totaled just over 469,100 and the take of steelhead totaled slightly under 199,000. In 1970 anglers reported taking 432,300 salmon and about 165,000 steelhead.

The big catch of salmon took place in offshore waters with a take of around 329,000. The tally includes fish taken at all popular sport fishing ports from the mouth of the Columbia in the north to Brookings on the south. The Columbia River system produced about 75,200 salmon while the coast streams yielded another 65,000.

For individual streams, the Columbia produced the most salmon to anglers. The Willamette ranked second, followed by the Umpqua, Rogue, Alsea, Nehalem, Trask, Deschutes, Clackamas, Siletz, Coos, Santiam, and Sandy. Anglers reported taking salmon from 69 streams of the state.

Anglers reported catching steelhead from 30 inland streams and 41 coastal rivers. The Columbia and its tributaries yielded about 62,000 while the coast streams yielded about 137,000.

The big steelhead-producing river in 1971 was the Rogue with sport fishermen creeling over 22,800 fish. The Umpqua yielded over 18,000 as did the Alsea. Anglers took about 17,400 steelhead from the Columbia, another 17,000 from the Nestucca, and over 16,000 from the Deschutes.
