Do you sometimes get the feeling there's nobody around these days but 19-year-olds? Does it seem as though advertising only plays up to the young, and politicians are out to win the youth vote, and even music and art are created only for the teen set?

Well, if you're around the 40 mark, take heart. Youth is not going to take over our society. Richard M. Scammon, author of "The Real Majority" and an expert on American voting habits, refutes the claim that the balance of political power has been drastically altered by the young. "The average age of the American voter in 1972 will be around 44 or 45," he says. "If anyone tells you that 25 million potential electors are under 25, which is true, you can reply that more than 50 million are over 50, which is also true."

Not only are there twice as many people over 50 as there are under 25 in the voting group, but people in the middle and older years tend to turn out in greater numbers at the polls. Some 70 to 75 percent vote at the age of 50, where only 45 to 50 percent turn out at age 21. So, middle-age Americans have substantial clout.

The real question, however, is not whether you have political power but how you use it. Fortunately, most mature voters do study the records and keep up with current events. They listen to speeches and write their congressmen to let him know their opinions.

"Your ballot box is painted red, white, and blue, and it's marked U.S. MAIL," wrote Congressman Morris K. Udall of Arizona in a letter to his constituents. He and other congressmen need to know how you would like to see things done. After all, it's your tax dollars they're spending, and you can help to shape and control America's future by letting your voice be heard in Washington.

Like Father, Like Son

Good or bad driving runs in families. Fathers with numerous traffic violations tend to have sons with similar records, according to studies made at two Michigan universities. The home environment seems to play a much more important role in shaping the habits of a young driver than the external forces of society ever can. Be aware of your driving habits, someone may be copying you!

Harry Sandquist Retires As County Extension Agent

Harry R. Sandquist, Malheur County Extension agent since 1945, will retire August 31, reports Lee Kolmer, Director, Oregon State University Cooperative Extension Service. Replacing Sandquist as chairman of the Malheur Extension Staff will be Ray Novotny, currently Harney County Extension agent, a position he has held since 1951.

During his years in the County, Sandquist has been a leader in developing educational programs which have aided in the development of Malheur agriculture to the point where the county ranks second in the State in value of agricultural production, Kolmer noted.

As chairman of the County Staff, he has given over-all leadership to Extension programs in agriculture, community development, home economics and 4-H and youth. In addition, he has seen the development of several special programs, such as current Expanded Food and Nutrition Education Program aimed specifically at economically disadvantaged families.

Sandquist came to Malheur County from Lakeview, where he was manager of the Goose Lake Water Users Association for seven years. The Lakeview position was his first after graduating in agriculture from OSU in 1938.

In 1958, he was honored by the Malheur County Farm Bureau and nominated for a State Farm Bureau award. He was cited for his working with youth, for improving agricultural production and marketing, for service to community organizations.

Active in several civic and fraternal organizations, Novotny was cited as "man of the year" by the Harney County Chamber of Commerce in 1957. Novotny received his bachelor's degree in agronomy and animal production from the University of Wyoming and earned his master's degree from OSU in 1970. He served with the U. S. Marine Corps during World War II.
