

THE AMERICAN FINE FOODS CORN CANNERY at Nyssa is nearing the middle of the annual campaign which this year promises to be one of the best in history. Plant Superintendent Mark Noel, lower left, said that the crop this year is of high quality, the tonnage is good, and the run will be a little longer than usual. About 650 tons of corn goes through the big factory every day. This is about 60 truck-loads, and results in 700,000 cans of corn per day put up by the 350 employees. The top two photos show factory scenes, with ears of corn coming down the sorting belts, and the husking machines on higher levels in the background. The next picture shows the cutting machines located upstairs where the corn is cut off the cob. The corn is then fed into the cans, sealed and goes into the continuous cooker, and does not stop until the cans reach the warehouse.

"Electric heat provides easy chair comfort"

Mrs. Kittie Herrington, Mrs. Leonard Herrington, Wilder, Idaho

"Just a few days time to put in electric heat made a big change in comfort for us," say the Herringtons. "After talking with friends and relatives who had electric heat, we decided we wanted it, too. It's clean. It's warm. It's convenient."

"Anyone who wants easy chair comfort should change to electric heat."

FLAMELESS ELECTRIC LIVING FOR A NEATER, CLEANER WORLD

NORTH SEA CHALLENGE

Though its forbidding floor is laced with boulders, trenches and canyons — and its wild waves and winds are treacherous to navigation — the North Sea promises to be one of the most rewarding battlegrounds for today's technological risktakers.

Why? Because, despite all its challenges and tricky geology, this wind-swept body of water might well rest above one of nature's greatest reservoirs of oil and gas — petroleum that is vital to Europe's rising energy demand. This scientifically sound belief was sparked by the 1959 discovery of an underground gas field in Holland which was so large, it placed that country fifth in the world as a natural gas supplier. It was only logical for explorers to anticipate the existence of similar fields beneath the floor of the nearby North Sea.

And so, oil men went to sea to survey the prospects. Taking advantage of the latest and most sophisticated electronic gear, engineers of Continental Oil Company soon discovered a profusion of undense structures and formations indicating the presence of an excitingly vast fuel reservoir beneath their very feet.

Not long afterwards, drilling began. And although Conoco experienced the disappointment of several "dry holes," subsequent successes made their experts more than just a little optimistic.

One major success is the extensive Viking Field, discovered in 1968-69. When Conoco's No. 3 well was completed, it was apparent that the field was of such a size to make gas extraction in commercial quantities an exciting potential. This potential was realized in March 1969 with the discovery of yet another well.

Later this year when gas will start to flow to market the Viking Field will be one of the most important elements in Great Britain's National Gas Grid system, and a "second wave" of exploration has discovered further North Sea riches. The North Sea challenge, apparently, is well worth the risk.

Never before in American history has it been more important for voters to understand our economy than right now. With incomes bigger but dollars buying less, the problem of inflation makes the need for fiscal responsibility vital.

Fiscal considerations were basic to the founding of this nation. "No taxation without representation" was no mere slogan. It was recognition that what the government spends and how it finances itself are of prime importance.

At this point in history, about one-third of all we produce goes to the government — and the government demands still more. In an election year, each party tries to put forth as many programs as possible that will appeal to the well-being of one group or another.

Many of the programs are valid considered separately, but extremely expensive when considered collectively. As individuals and taxpayers, we must not be influenced by golden rhetoric or great promises of new luxuries we cannot afford.

Many people and clubs have formed study groups to learn more about the issues and projects now under consideration by Congress. Others have chosen to research older programs to find out if they are really necessary or can be combined with similar programs for administrative savings.

Some time ago Rep. George Mahon (D-Tex.) Chairman, Appropriations Committee, House of Representatives, said, "Control of public spending rests with the people who create public sentiment and elect officials of government. Congress is not going to practice restraint unless the message comes through loud and clear from the people..." It's up to us to speak up!
