ARMY WORMS ARE SHOWING UP

Army worms are making an appearance in some areas of Malheur County according to Malheur County Extension Agent, Leeds Bailey. Present infestations are mostly light but farmers should watch their fields closely as damaging numbers could develop. Alfalfa hay fields appear to be the primary target of the pests. Some fields were treated for the pests last year in the latter part of August and early September.

Bailey said that the infestations usually start as definite spots in the field and spread from there. The defoliated spots show up with a silvery sheen when viewed from a distance in the late evening or early morning when the fields receive slanting rays of the sun.

The mature larval forms are difficult to control with insecticides. Bailey suggests that a close watch be kept on the pests and that heavy infestations be treated early to avoid heavy crop damage. Early treatment also catches the worms when they are smaller and more susceptible to insecticides.
