

LISSA NISHITANI STARTED PLAYING the piano at five years of age but didn't really get serious until she was a senior in high school. During her last year of high school, her playing improved a great deal and she began to enjoy her music. She now is attending Boise State College on music and academic scholarships.

PLAYING HER WAY TOWARD BACHELORS DEGREE IN MUSIC

Lissa Nishitani is playing her way toward a bachelors degree in music. Lissa, the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Tom Nishitani of Nyssa, is a junior at Boise State College. As a music major Lissa must practice her instrument, the piano, three hours a day as well as attend a full load of classes. Lissa is contemplating going one extra year at BSC which would enable her to also receive a degree in education.

While enrolled at BSC, Lissa is living at Driscoll Hall. She feels that living on campus is an important part of a well-rounded education. "You just can't ignore people with different quirks and habits," she commented. "You must live with them. That in itself is an education." She also has learned that certain things aren't to be taken for granted--the laundry doesn't wash itself. Besides changes in herself, Lissa has also noticed changes in the college. "The college is always growing," she said, "especially the Music Department. Each year the competition is stiffer and students are always striving to do better." During her high school years, Lissa attended Nyssa High. She was active in FHA, student council, German Club and band. She also worked as a teacher's aide, teaching second and fifth graders for one class period a day.
